THE INVESTIGATORS

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, telling the story of his conversion to spiritualism, says he began his career as a materialist, a student Darwin, Huxley and Spencer. He was not in sympathy with spiritualism, but considered it a scientific duty to investigate anything that came to hand with an open mind. He found that those who believed in spiritualism were those who had studied the matter. Those who condemned "had invariably considered the thing too preposterous for investigation." Whatever one's opinion on such matters may be, Sir Arthur had us there. Most of the people who despise spiritualism have no first-hand knowledge of it. But analogies crowd upon the mind. Most of those who despised the liquor traffic were those who had no first-hand acquaintance with the experience of drunkenness. And the man who open-mindedly started out to experiment with alcoholism soon became a witness whose veracity could not be depended on. An one surveys the whole history of so-called communication with the dead, there may seem to be a few cases scattered over thousands of years which cannot be explained in any other way. For one more demanding such belief, the rest of a million cases can be explained by modern psychology or by ancient eastern teachings. And somehow the main point in regard to all these things seems to be this: Just as a nation gets on with its daily life and its spiritual development better without alcohol than with it, so people get on better with life and service and spiritual illumination without the intoxication of dabbling with matters of the astral plane. Spiritualism, like alcohol, may give one a sort of specious comfort by dulling the sober sense, by putting to sleep the high powers. But it cannot be indulged in often or deeply without corrupting the fine fabric of the mind.

It is easier to kick up a fuss than to step on it afterward.

Dear Folks:

How much money is he making, is a question often asked, in referring to some person who in luxury has basked for a period that's long enough to make it so appear that his income must be close to fifty thousand every year.

On the other hand the fellow who is modest in his ways seldom rouses any interest tho his bills he always pays, for it seems that it is evident his income must be small, in the pleasures of the wealthy he indulges not at all.

Now the man who spends money faster far than he can earn, may be earning fifty thousand or one tenth of that amount, but if when the year is over, he's earned less than he has spent, for the twelve months he has labored hard, he hasn't made a cent. While the fellow who lives modestly and sings his simple song, may be saving slow but surely as he plods his way along and altho the dollars he may earn in number may be few, still the money that he makes is far the greater of the two.

So it's not the dollars that we may earn that stand for what we make, but it's what we lay aside each year that tells if we'll partake of the future peace and comfort we all plan when work is done and we live upon the savings that we made in days of fun.

A FORM LETTER Doug Bleeker came home in an upper berth the other night. The air was warm as blazes, and to make things more uncomfortable, Doug found that the berth was inhabited. When he got home, Doug was rather warm under the collar and sat down and wrote the railroad a rather peppy letter. He received a very apologetic reply from the company, deploring the fact that there were any vermin in their sleeping cars. In fact that letter was such a masterpiece that Doug almost forgot his fret, until a pencilled memorandum dropped out of the envelope on which was written "send this guy the bed bug letter."

LOVE LINES "You say you're too tired to go to show—" "Forgot it was my birthday, did ya?" "Let me tell you a thing or two—" "If you don't pay that bill by tomorrow you've got a new cook—" "Your friend! What a gang of—" "You'll laugh at the other side of your mouth—" "I hooked you! My God, when you proposed to me—" "You want to read your papers, do ya?" "You give me luxuries! I'm screaming. Say—"

SECRETARY ADAMS TO BE HERE SOON

District Attorney George Neuner today received a letter from E. J. Adams, secretary to Senator Stanford, stating that he will be in Roseburg at some date in the near future for the purpose of meeting with any residents of this part of the state who have any business pending or any special interest in government departments. Mr. Adams desires principally to meet any ex-service men who have matters which they desire to have Senator Stanford give his personal attention. Mr. Adams will announce as soon as possible the exact date he will be able to stop in Roseburg. He also urges the Roseburg Chamber of Commerce to use its influence in having President Harding stop in this city on his way through from San Francisco to Portland.

OBITUARY. Joanne Denton was born Nov. 6, 1857, near Madisonville, Tennessee. She was married to Adam A. Stafford Dec. 7, 1874. To this union nine children were born, five of whom survive her: W. C., A. H., Mrs. O. P. Haley all of Roseburg, Mrs. Della Williams of Portland, and J. M. of Oklahoma. Her husband also remains to mourn his loss, and relatives and friends in several states. Mrs. Stafford united with the Methodist church soon after her marriage and adhered to that faith to the last. The family first came to Oregon about ten years ago, but spent several years elsewhere before settling here permanently which was a year ago last December. She was a true wife and a good mother, literally giving her life for the comfort of her family. She suffered a paralytic stroke some time ago, and passed away in the Roseburg hospital April 23. The service was conducted in the home of her son, W. C. Stafford, by Rev. W. S. Gordon, and Mrs. Gordon sang.
