NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 7.

A RARE ENTERTAINMENT OFFERED CHAUTAUQUAS

Beatrice Weller Will Charm With Her Chalk and Chatter.

While Beatrice Weller is generally known here and abroad as a "chalk-talk artist," her work is not to be confused with that of the ordinary entertainer who relies upon a blackboard and colored crayons to entertain the audience. Miss Weller is a cartoonist in the real sense of the word, carrying her audiences through many humorous and romantic scenes. Accompanying her illustrations with a run of rapid-fire comments, she sways her hearers from laughter to tears as she wills. Miss Weller spent several months in France during 1918-19 entertaining our overseas forces, and because of the deep impression which we then received as to the need of a constructive plan for international understanding, she was employed a year ago for constructive platform work by the International League on the Limitation of Armament.

NOVELTY WOULD WEAR OFF

Boss Had Right Idea as to How to Do Away With Excitement in Office.

He had been getting to work late with such regularity that the boss' ire was aroused and so he resolved to begin arriving at the office more punctually. Anyhow, all the standard alibis, such as the alarm clock failing to ring, the crowded street cars passing him up at his corner, were about worn out in his case.

And so one morning all week he drifted with attempted nonchalance into the office among the early arrivals. The others of the office staff at once set up a clamor.

"What's the matter, couldn't you sleep last night?" some asked.

"He probably was out all night and hasn't gone home yet," others remarked.

"The clock at his house must have been an hour fast this morning," said another of the gang.

Then the target of all these remarks became indignant. Going to the boss' desk, he made his complaint.

"If it is going to cause so darn much excitement for me to get down on time, I guess I had better be late every day," he said.

"Nope," said the boss, without looking up from his work. "Get down on time every morning and you won't cause any excitement."

Fan Saves Coal.

Long Island commuters, who are among those hardest hit by the coal shortage, have adopted many expedients to eke out their supplies and to make the utmost of what fuel they have.

One of them tested an idea with so much success that many other users of hot-air furnaces are following his example. He closed the damper of his intake pipe, shutting off all air from the outside, and placed a small electric fan in the cold-air duct between the outer wall of the cellar and the furnace.

The fan drives the hot air into his room heated to a much higher temperature than it formerly was when drawn from outdoors.

He says the cost of running the fan is of no account compared with the improvement in the heating of the house.—New York Sun.

Facing the Fact.

My employer, who most strenuously objects to smoking, comes to the office every morning and invariably leaves at noon for the balance of the day. Immediately upon his departure I draw my pipe from my pocket and enjoy it to the fullest extent.

One afternoon he gave me a surprise by waiting in. I hastily put my pipe in my pocket, not knowing what else to do with it. While bending over my books he kept remarking about smelling something burning.

Finally the stenographer procured a glass of water and as she dashed it on my burning coat I will confess it was the most embarrassing moment of my life.—Exchange.

Ton-Litter Plan Results in Great Increase in Production of Pork

(International News Service.)
CHICAGO, May 7.—More pigs will wiggle their chops to the American table this year as the result of the Ton-litter plan devised by Professor James R. Wiley, of Purdue University. In order to encourage an increase in the marketing of hogs, and to block the break in the pig crop between farrowing time and marketing, Professor Wiley, in 1922, inaugurated a Ton-litter contest in Indiana. In this contest the farmer or boy who produced a ton or more of pork from a single litter of pigs, within six months of their birth, was awarded a gold medal.

Thirty-two of an entry list of 559 the contest won these medals. According to Professor Wiley, nearly only four to five pigs of Ton-litter are marketed, but under Ton-litter system practically whole litter of ten or fifteen pigs are saved through skillful breeding, feeding, management and early maturity.

In Indiana thousands of farmers have entered the Ton-litter contest this year. Professor Wiley declares other States in the corn belt are now started similar contests, now Texas, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio.
