"A PURITAN WIFE"

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER 30

Ann knew, even as she said it, that she had a struggle before her, that Grace was tenacious of an idea, and that after saying she would eat with Dick, would resent Ann's plan. So to avoid discussion in his room she said:

"Grace, I have promised Dick we would have our meals together. It will give us a good chance to talk over our business affairs. I will give you yours here at the same time."

"Why, Ann! You heard him say it would be jolly to have me, and the doctor said he must be kept cheerful. You can talk business in the morning, have breakfast with him, and I'll entertain him at lunch and dinner."

Ann opened her lips, then closed them tightly. Some way she would have her way in this. But later in the day Dick said:

"Grace has planned everything nicely. Ann, you and I will have breakfast together while my nurse sleeps, and then she will have her luncheon with me. He said something about dinner. Trying not to hurt me, Ann thought."

A satisfied expression on Grace's face was unbearable, and Ann left the room without replying. Why had she been foolish enough to allow Grace to install herself in the house? Why had she not insisted that Ned take her away. Bessie had not been well, or she would have urged her to interfere, but Ann was singularly unselfish. She knew Bessie's dislike of Grace and hesitated to say anything.

"I can't bear her! I won't have her!" she said to herself as she cleared away the remnants of Grace's lunch. That she had not cleared the table aggravated Ann, as little inconsequential things will when one is upset. "She's lazy, thoughtless. Why should I be made miserable by having her here?"

The baby asleep, her work finished, Ann went in to sit with Dick. Grace was reading aloud, and he held up a protesting finger as she spoke.

"I'll read to Dick now," she said, holding out her hand for the book, "that is unless you'd rather talk, dear."

Reluctantly Grace relinquished the book after a quick glance at Ann's face.

"Nurses always have an hour or two off in the afternoon, don't they?" Dick asked. "Go take a walk. You'll tire yourself out if you stay in so close, as well as get sick of your patient."

"Take good care of my Viking, Ann!" Grace said, as after patting his pillows she slowly, and with perfectly patient reluctance, left them alone together.

"A wife usually takes as good care of her husband as a stranger does," Ann replied coldly.

She read until Dick declared he wanted to talk, to plan about the work.

"It's awful to be lying here knowing all there is to do," he grumbled. "I feel as if I must get up, leg or no leg."

"You mustn't feel that way, Dick dear. I'll get along."

"You're a wonder, Ann. I told Grace we'd have a spill if she wasn't careful but she wouldn't listen to me."

"Does she ever listen to anyone?" Ann asked quietly.

"She's so full of life and good spirits, she never thinks of trouble," Dick at once made apology for her.

"It's awful good of her to stay cooped up here with me when she hates to be tied down in any way. I feel very grateful on your account, Ann. You had all you ought to do with the baby and house without this."

"I can easily care for you, too, Dick. It isn't as if you had to be constantly watched, have medicine regularly."

"I know—but I should get wild lying here alone. It's jolly of her. Ann said no more regarding Grace. She well knew that with his active habits, his out-door life, the confinement was irksome to Dick. But she also knew she couldn't endure having Grace here much longer—that she would not. If only she could think of some way to make her leave of her own volition, Dick would resent it terribly if she offended her.

But while sweet, tactful in many ways, Ann was no schemer. She could think of no way to get rid of Grace save by plainly telling her to go—that she hesitated to do, fearing to anger Dick.

That night she did as she had threatened, set up a small table in Dick's room after putting Grace's dinner on the dining room table. Then she quietly took in the dinner, and after arranging it took her seat close to the bed, where she could wait upon Dick, replenish his tray. Then said:

"Your dinner will get cold, Grace. It is on the table." Ann's tone was very quiet. But she at once commenced to eat.

"But I thought—" Grace commenced, frowning.

"You thought you were to eat with Dick, but I prefer to do so myself. Better hurry if you don't want a cold dinner," Ann added, as Grace glanced at Dick, showing plainly she wished him to interfere, then went from the room, an angry look on her face.

AUTOMOBILE TRADE NEEDS ORGANIZING

Local Dealers Meet at Banquet With Secretary of State and Officials of Auto Trade Association—Legislation Guarded.

Next to the largest business in Oregon, the automobile business needs organization said N. P. Cady, president of the Oregon Automotive trade association, at a meeting of the local dealers yesterday. He was followed in his speech by R. J. Staehli, secretary of the association, who pointed out what had been done by the automobile organizations in other states. Sam A. Koser, secretary of the state, and T. A. Rafferty, state traffic officer, visited the meeting.

Cady urged that the local dealers join the state association of dealers outside of Portland as over 2,000,000 cars will be manufactured this year. Such a large number of new cars is going to need the united effort of the dealers to keep the market in condition for used machines steady. He pointed out that through the cooperation of the dealers this second largest industry of the state may be protected from destructive legislation. More than 100 proposed laws against the automobile owner were introduced to the last session of the state legislature.

Staehli told what had been done by the association to protect the automobile owners from obnoxious laws. He cited instances where auto drivers were forced to prove themselves innocent of breaking the law instead of being considered innocent until being proved guilty.

The coming year is going to be a trial to most dealers as they will be forced to carry a larger number of cars through the winter in order to keep the factories running.

Local dealers represented at the meeting were Lockwood Motor company, Ford and Fordson, Rapp Brothers, dealers in Star cars, I. J. Broadway dealer in Garner and Jordan machines, Patzlauf and Baker, Buick dealers, George Burnett, Maxwell dealer, and J. O. Newland & Son, Dodge Brothers dealers, and A. C. Steep of the Portland dealers in Overland and Willys-Knight cars. Each local business gave the fee to become members of the state association.

This is a studebaker year.

PLAN NEW BUILDING FOR CAMAS VALLEY

B. R. Richter, of the general merchandise firm of Richter & Co., located at Camas Valley, was in the city yesterday looking after business matters in connection with the erection of a new store building at that place. Lumber is now on the ground for the building and work will be started at once. The change in the route of the highway at that place having left the present store building a considerable distance from the main roadway it is now the intention of the owners of the store to erect their new structure on the highway proper so they will be in a better position to serve the public. The building will cover a ground space of 42x74 feet and will be modern in every particular. Seven acres of ground has been purchased and this will be used as a camp ground for the accommodation of tourists and others. A number of cottages will be erected for the convenience of persons who wish to spend their summer vacations in the valley where hunting and fishing can be enjoyed, this section having long been popular with the sportsmen.

Mr. Richter has been located at Camas Valley for the past two years and is very enthusiastic over the future prospects of that section, and with the opening of the new highway the residents of the valley will find a ready market for much of their produce. This will be a strong incentive for the agricultural interests of that section to improve their holdings and engage more extensively in the cultivation of their land.

In their new quarters Richter & Co. will carry a much larger and more complete stock, giving the very best of service to their constantly growing list of customers.

If you want a broccoli planter get it now at Wharton Bros.
