"A PURITAN WIFE"

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER XIV
Dick asked them to remain for lunch, but Ned refused, saying: "I want to get back and get to work at once. Come, Grace!"

Languidly Grace got up, and as she passed Dick said: "Remember I go in three days. Her tone a reminder. Ann wondered of what. What had Dick promised her?"

"Goodbye, Ann! Remember what I told you! Learn to look at life less seriously. You'll have a lot better time!"

The girl's assurance was amazing. After they had left Dick talked enthusiastically about the seedlings, his delight at getting them at a price. He praised Ann for her help, was more like himself than before the incident that had so pained Ann.

"He loves his ranch more than he loves her," she said to herself, "perhaps more than he loves baby and me. But we're not jealous of that. It's our home too."

In three days Grace was going. "Thank God!" Ann said aloud as she sat on the porch shaded by the bougainvillea vine, little Jack beside her. "Perhaps, baby, I will be happy again with just you and daddy."

Bessie telephoned that Ned insisted upon giving a party the night before Grace left. She added: "Don't come if you don't want to, Ann. I shall understand."

But Dick insisted upon accepting the invitation. He said: "We don't have a great deal of pleasure. Ann. And Grace was right. It doesn't do to take life too seriously. We won't stay late, on account of Jack." They would have to take him.

"I wish you would not insist upon going Dick," Ann said.

"Don't be silly! Of course we'll go. I have to go to the store tomorrow. I need several things, so make your list." Then: "You don't have to go to the party if you don't want to. I shall go, however."

"Oh, I'll go with you," Ann answered, fearful she knew not of what should she let him go alone.

The next morning Dick started for the general store, a list of necessities in his pocket. About noon Bessie came over. Grace had come with him, he going out of his way to get her. That was what she meant by her reminder when she spoke of going. He had promised to take her with him.

Ann tried to comfort herself by thinking it would keep him away from the bad liquor he drank, that she was going away soon, etc. But as the day wore slowly away, she was gripped again by jealousy, and unaccustomed tears fell as she busied herself about the house.

It was ten o'clock when she heard the flapper, and then Grace's voice. She opened the door, and saw Grace helping Dick, who leaned faintly upon her.

"He's got an awful skate on, Ann!" she said as Ann added her assistance. "He's too funny for words." Ann never spoke. She helped Dick on to the couch, then turned to Grace.

"Take the car. Let us bring it back."

"Hospitality aren't you?" Grace laughed mockingly and then for the first time Ann noticed that she too had been drinking. A shudder of disgust ran over her as she started for the car. She would remove the parcels some of the things would be needed in the morning.

Not one single package could she find. Without a word she went into the house, closing the door. She heard Grace drive away, then turned to Dick, who was already asleep.

"He forgot again—and she was with him," she muttered as she made him as comfortable as she could. "He'll forget once too often," she said to herself, as she had many times said to him. "I will not always forgive."

"We went on a bust, Ann! Grace was so cut up because I refused to go before, that when she planned to go to a movie and have dinner in a restaurant I couldn't refuse her. I hadn't time to do the errands before the movie, and then we stopped to talk to some of the boys, and I bought a pint. I took a big drink, and then I had dinner and then it was too late to get the things. We spent too much time eating." This the next morning.

Dick had spoken lightly, like an irresponsible boy. As Ann didn't speak he added:

"You know Grace is leaving day after tomorrow. It would have seemed petty to refuse her a good time."

"She drank with you at dinner?" "Yes, and she's a good sport! Carries it better than I do."

"So I observed. She helped you into the house."

"How did she get home—walk? It would be just like her," Dick chuckled.

"I told her to take the car. Let it bring it back."

That was all. Ann said no word of censure, Dick of regret. But all day Ann had the feeling that she should have protested; should have shown her disapproval.

Tomorrow—A pain of Praise.

MOVIES

PEARL WHITE WINS AUDIENCE

The audience that attended, at the Antlers theatre yesterday, the first showing here of "Any Wife" Pearl White's latest Fox picture, were delighted with the entertainment. The story is tense drama until the final reel, when the tension is suddenly relieved by a surprise that is startling.

"Any Wife" of which Julia Tolosa is the author, sets forth the unfortunate sequel of a wife's surrender to discontent with her home life as barren of the "spice" for which she longs. Lured into indiscretion, she pays a heavy price for her mistaken philosophy of life, being driven finally to utter despair at the situation in which she finds herself.

RELEASE DATE ON "MARY" FILM

"Mary of the Movies" Film Booking offices "Hollywood Revealed" production, featuring forty well known screen stars is scheduled for release by the F. B. O. May 27. The picture will probably be introduced to the exhibitors of the east with a special showing in the Astor hotel such as was staged for the presentation of "Westbound Limited" last month. The photoplay is said to divulge inside truths of Hollywood and its stars, incidents taking in actual working appearance of forty names well known to theatre-goers. The picture was directed by John McElmermott who plays the role of director in the production itself. First showing at Liberty theatre, Roseburg, Oregon. Thursday and Friday.

RICH SWISS SETTINGS

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good salt water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.
