

Ask the delivery man if you want to know what good gasoline should be. It must be quick starting, it must "pick up" quickly and accelerate smoothly. It must have power and speed, and serve at the least cost per mile. Quick starting Shell Gasoline is a favorite with him because it has all these essential qualities.

IMPORTANT TO KEEP HARNESS IN REPAIR

Parts Should Be Adjusted to Fit Horses Properly.

Not Difficult to Allow Team Few Days Rest in Severe Weather—Renew All Broken or Badly Worn Pieces.

Every farmer realizes the importance of having a first-class set of team and light harness. It is not only essential that the parts are adjusted so as to fit the horses properly, but the harness requires to be occasionally dressed with some softening preservative, so that it will be kept strong, durable and attractive.

As it takes a day or two to go over the harness in a thorough manner, it is well to choose a time when there is no work for the horses. However, it will not be difficult to allow the horses a few days' rest during the winter weather.

When dressing a harness it is just as well to give it a good overhauling while you are at it. Take all the straps off the harness, breeching, backband and bridle apart. If any parts are broken or badly worn they should either be replaced or renewed. Then give all the parts a thorough washing with a good harness soap. This will rub off dirt and applied with a sponge.

After the harness is well dried it can receive a dressing of some softening and waterproofing preservative, such as harness oil, or any of the other good dressings which are on the market.

Last of all the harness mountings should be polished. It is wonderful the improvement this will make.

Putting the harness parts together will be an easy job for the experienced one, but it will be rather confusing to the uninitiated. However, with a little display of commonsense even the beginner will not find it puzzling.

Oats Good Growing Feed.

Oats is a good growing feed for all kinds of young stock, and is the standard grain feed for horses in many parts of the country. It has a high protein content and is easily digested, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

CROPS FOR SPRING PLANTING

Rhubarb and Asparagus Do Better if Planted Early in Season—Rich Soil Needed.

Rhubarb and asparagus may be planted in the fall, but most gardeners prefer spring planting in the North. Fall planting will give good results in the South where the roots are not injured by frost. Both these plants thrive best in a very rich sandy loam, but will give good results in any soil that is not wet and is well filled with humus. Rhubarb roots containing one or two eyes are set about three inches deep in rows four feet apart and from two to four feet apart in the row, depending on the richness of the soil and variety. Plums and Victoria are popular varieties. Give frequent shallow cultivation during the growing season. Remove seed stalks when they appear. Asparagus needs much the same treatment.

MAKING USE OF CURRYCOMB

Best-Liked Grooming Tool for Lazy Man—Never Use It on Animal's Head or Legs.

The use of the currycomb is very much abused, because it is the best liked grooming tool for the lazy man, as it makes possible a quick grooming. It should not be used much upon the animal's body, and never upon the head or upon the legs, except for dirt that cannot be brushed off. Its greatest use is for cleaning the body brush. It does enable much quicker grooming where it is employed for the entire body, and in some thick, heavy-coated, thick-skinned horses it may do no particular harm.

Chapter IX.

Ann had many times tried to act as if she either did not notice or that she enjoyed Grace's and Dick's nonsense, but now she determined to try harder than ever to hide her feelings; to join with them.

"Hello, Norton," Dick said, as he and Grace came up on the porch. "Stay to dinner, Grace is going to, and we'll have a game of bridge afterward."

"Do, Hugh," Ann added, saying nothing to Grace, whom she had not expected to remain.

"Thanks, I'd enjoy it," Hugh said, then led Dick to talk of his crops, how his young trees were coming on, so rather shutting Grace out of the conversation, while Ann went in to attend to the dinner, to tell Nora they were to have guests.

When she returned to the porch, Grace was sitting in the hammock, and Ann at once went over and sat beside her, and complimented her costume.

"I don't wonder you like it," Grace replied carelessly, "but it isn't worth for Dick to see it. He is wearing anything smart. He's the only one appreciates them."

"Didn't I just tell you I liked your dress?" Ann asked.

"Oh, yes! But one doesn't dress for a woman."

Ann said nothing more, but Grace brought up the subject at the table.

"Ann thinks women dress to please each other, Dick," she said.

"Well, what of it?" he replied.

"It shows how little she knows of the world, her incoherence!" It was almost a sneer, that last word.

"I think were I able to afford dainty, expensive things, and lived where I could wear them appropriately, I should like to wear them to please myself, my love of beauty," Ann said quietly.

"I don't see but you look as well as anyone, Ann," Hugh said.

"Of course you'd say that! Everyone knows you're in love with Ann. Don't blush, Ann, it isn't any crime. I've been in love with Dicky ever since I first saw him."

Ann's face was crimson, and Hugh looked as if he would like to strangle Grace, but Dick only laughed, and returned:

"Your being in love wouldn't mean anything, Grace."

"Don't be too sure, Dicky. I may not be as safe as you think."

Hugh changed the subject to

Ann's relief, yet all through dinner her face flamed. She had caught a look in Hugh's eyes that showed he was hurt. And she felt as if in some way Grace's last speech was a threat, that she would now try harder than ever to win Dick.

The evening passed pleasantly enough. And Hugh took Grace home. Ann was glad he had stayed to do that. Dick had been very gay, but after they left he said:

"Ann, why do you wear that color? It's unbecoming."

"Why, Dick? You used to say brown was my color, that you loved me in it."

"Oh, well, our ideas change. I wish you'd get something new, things like Grace wears."

Ann bit her lips to keep back the reply that hovered there. Grace had made fun of her, her taste in dress. After a moment she said:

"I will get some new clothes, Dick. But the things Grace wears would bankrupt me, and would be very inappropriate for your wife. We are ranchers, Dick, not society people."

"Suit yourself—I only thought—"

"Thought what, Dick?" as he hesitated, she interrupted.

"That perhaps you would like to look like other people."

Heart-sick as she was so often, Ann said no more. She was always dainty and neat in her bright frocks, which she made herself, or in the soft brown crepe, her best dress, which she had donned while attending to the dinner, and which, while simply made, was undoubtedly becoming. But now Grace had made Dick think she looked badly in it. It was only a little thing, another of those pin pricks which hurt a loving woman, but it kept her awake half the night.

The next day Ann wrote for samples of new goods. She would make herself a different dress, one that would make her look younger, a gayer affair, but she would carefully abstain from copying anything of Grace's, neither would she let her know she made it because of anything she had said to Dick.

The samples came and she selected a creamy crepe, ordered it, also a fashion magazine. She would do everything she could to keep Dick. She realized that she must.

Yet somehow Ann felt ashamed that this was necessary.

INSTALL HYDRANT

A new fire hydrant, with steamer connection, was installed this morning in front of the Roseburg hotel. The hydrant taken from that corner was moved to the corner of Military and Corey avenues, where the former hydrant was broken off by a skidding auto a few days ago. In buying new hydrants the city is buying them with connections for pumps, anticipating the time when the city will buy a new fire engine. These hydrants are being placed in the business district and the old hydrants are being moved into residential districts. This it is believed will give better protection for the valuable properties in the business section and at the same time will keep the residential district well supplied with hydrants.

SOY BEAN GROWN WITH CORN

Becoming Very Popular Crop in Corn Belt as It is Adapted to Wide Range of Soils.

The soy bean can be grown successfully with corn and is becoming a very popular crop in the Corn Belt, as it can be hogged down and helps to balance the ration of corn. It can be grown on a wide range of soils, but inoculation is necessary when it is grown for the first time, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The hay from this crop contains a high percentage of protein and is palatable. This plant adds a great deal to the value of silage when it is grown with silage corn.
