ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY

(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—We are puzzled over a problem and we have decided to come to you for advice. We are two girls 18 and 17 years of age and are both deeply in love with the same man. He is 20 years old, very handsome, and goes to college. He has said to both of us at different times that he loved us, and as neither of us will give him up to the other it will eventually ruin our friendship which is best to us both now. If you will help us we will be ever so grateful.

PINKY AND SKEEZIN.—You are both too young to be even thinking of such things, much less talking of love. Forget this silly idea of giving him up to each other, and both resolve to be good friends, both with yourselves and him.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—I go with a young man 20 years old. I am 16. I had a birthday recently and he gave me a wrist watch. It is a real good one. My mother insists that I give it back to him and I don't see why I should. Should I give it back to him?

JACKIE.—You are too young to be receiving valuable gifts from young men. Do as your mother says about it.

MOVIES

Antlers Theatre

The fact that motion picture players often have careers in which they have won recognition before entering upon photography work is revealed by the cast of "The Prisoner of Zenda," now at the Antlers Theatre.

Alfred Terry, who plays the leading role, has received unusual commendation for his work as a painter. Barbara La Marr, although still in her twenties, has had three complete careers in dancing, novel and scenario writing, and now acting, to her credit. Ramon Navarro likewise has been a dancer of note. Leslie Stone, Robert Edison, Stuart Holmes and Malcolm McFadden each have other interests which they can pursue professionally.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" is based on Anthony Hope's novel. Mary O'Hara wrote the scenario. John O'Hara photographed it. Edward Ross dramatized it.

Liberty Theatre

The attraction at the Liberty Theatre tonight will be "Daughters of the Night," the newest Hammer production since the famous "Black Men's Wives." In the cast are Gerson Cline, Miriam Cooper, Stuart Holmes, and other well known stars. This is said to be one of the most beautifully staged and starred productions of the year, as well as being a drama worth seeing. It is based on Edgar Allan Poe's novel.

NOTICE POMONA GRANGE

Pomona Grange will meet with Malaga Grange at Malaga, June 29, at 20 a. in Block dinner at noon. All day session.

Woman in Unique Position

Mrs. Jessie Benedict, of Warrenton, New York, is believed to be the only woman in the United States to become head of an organization of Civil War veterans. She has been elected president of the Orange Blossoms, the survivors of the famous One Hundred and Twenty-fourth regiment, New York volunteers, of which her father was a member.

Showing Time's Change

Mrs. Mary Bradwell of Chicago in 1922 applied for a license to sit at a table in the Supreme court of Illinois, the Supreme court of the United States affirming the decision; but there are many in the state, women being admitted to practice by statute.

"A PURITAN WIFE"

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER LXXV

Ann went about in a sort of a daze for the week following the party. She made no further mention of it, or of Grace. She did all her housework as usual, even looking Dick in the orchard when it was necessary, but not making excuses to be with him, as she had been doing.

Nora watched her intently, yet without attracting her attention. The girl was sure something unpleasant had happened at the party, and just as sure Grace was at the bottom of it. She almost asked her mother, but she would not do so for her, or try to do to make her happy.

Ann had lost her color, although she was tanned. She went about with unsmiling lips and sad, quick looking eyes, and when she thought herself observed, she made a nervous attempt to appear as usual, and was so far successful that not even Dick noticed anything wrong with her.

Constantly she heard Dick asking for one more kiss, always giving his face as he leaned over Grace, the light in his eyes. Dick, as was his way, had seemingly forgotten the affair, forgotten Ann's indignation and her refusal to ride with Grace.

And Grace too, took the same attitude. She came and went as usual, running out to the orchard with Dick, leaning on his arm, teasing him, feeling with him. She renewed her attentions to little Jack, coaxing him with gifts that Ann destroyed as soon as she left, and even Jack's tears could deter her.

She avoided Grace whenever it was possible. When it was not, she would sit quietly, not joining in the conversation. Once she remarked:

"I don't see how Dick stands it. Ann, you never seem to want to be gay and bright. You certainly are the little Puritan."

Dick flushed, but Ann went calmly on with her sewing, not daring to reply, fearing she would say too much. But all the time she was thinking, wondering how she could break up this affair between Dick and Grace before it ran its course.

Ann was sure now that Dick had ceased to love her; that he cared for Grace. But to her mind that was no excuse for failing in his duty as a husband and father. She did not—she could not believe him unfaithful to his vows. But she also realized that he was in danger of forgetting himself, and that a constant association with Grace would lead to a dangerous situation that could not be ignored.

Dick's carelessness of her feelings when with Grace, hurt Ann terribly. When he looked at Grace's smiling face, when he was with her, he seemed to have lost all sense of the girl and her work. But it would do no good, it would only drive Dick further from her. Only Ann saw the subtle tears, the quivering lip, the look that said: "I love you."

"Don't you feel well, Ann?"

"Yes—why?"

"You seem so quiet. I guess you better not try to help in the orchard for awhile. I'll get along without you."

Ann tried to think he spoke in kindness, but couldn't while she thought that he had wanted her to remain in the house because it would give him more freedom when Grace was with him.

"Helping you doesn't hurt me," she replied.

"Do as you like, but don't get sick," he answered as he rose from the table.

For several days she did not go near the orchards. To be alone with her mother, though, was a certain relief, but to have to avoid Dick, she knew she was giving Grace an opportunity, one that was quickly seized, and that often she spent the entire day with Dick.

Finally to endure alone longer, Ann one day, without Grace, as she supposed to ask Dick had not left the house.

"Come in, Grace, I want to talk to you."

"Yes—why?"
