"A PURITAN WIFE"

By Jane Phelps

CHAPTER LXX

Almost insane with fear, Ann ran back and forth, wringing her hands, crying for Jack to come to her. Dick, white and trembling, got out the car, and with hopeful words went in one direction, Nora running along the road in the opposite. Ann was persuaded to stay near the house in the hope he might come back.

It was Nora who found the little fellow, tired, dusty, weeping. She grabbed him in her arms and hurried back to the house, where, with a cry of joy, Ann snatched him from her, crying and laughing over him hysterically.

"I'se goin' see Gace," he said when Ann asked why he went away. "Gace telled me she 'ould give me horsie," he sobbed, the tears streaking his little dirty face.

Nora had run now to meet Dick when he should turn back, and Jack, tired with his tramp, fell asleep in Ann's arms.

"It's her fault! Something she said to him made him do it. She isn't satisfied to take Dick. She tried to take my baby, too."

Dick had gone some distance before he turned, and Jack had been sleeping in Ann's arms fully 15 minutes before he returned with Nora beside him.

"The little rogue, giving us such a scare," Dick said as he bent and kissed the dirty little face. "What do you suppose made him do it?" Nora had told where she found him, trudging along in the dust, crying.

"Grace made him do it," Ann said in a voice full of hatred.

"What are you saying, Ann? Grace wasn't with him!" Dick turned to Nora, who shook her head, her eyes on Ann, the hatred in her mistress' face reflected in hers.

"She told him she would give him something and he was going after it—my darling baby, all alone on the road. He might have been killed—or stolen," Ann said, the hardness still in her voice as she hugged him closer.

"The little rascal, and he was going toward Ned's, too." There was intense relief in Dick's face, but now that Jack was at home, unharmed, he could see no reason why Ann should act as she did. The idea of blaming Grace!

"Nora," Ann said, when Dick left them to put up the car. "Never let him out of your sight one minute after this. When I am busy you can neglect the work, let it go. But never—never give that girl a chance to be alone with my baby—not for a minute."

"That I won't, ma'am. I seen her talkin' to him yesterday, talkin' in that coaxin' way of hers, but I never thought she was tryin' to tease the little darlin' away." Then, her indignation rising, she said: "What makes you let her come here, Mrs. Belden? She's no good, and is goin' to make more trouble for you."

"I can't help—can't prevent her," Ann said, her dignity, that Nora was a servant, all forgotten in her fear for her boy, "but we'll keep Jackie away from her—she shan't touch him or talk to him."

"I'll see to that!" Nora declared, going into the house, muttering.

For an hour Ann held her baby boy, then he awakened, she bathed and dressed him, telling him gently that he never—never must run away again. But his lip quivered, and he cried that he wanted to see "Gace," that he wanted his "horsie."

"Mother will get you a horsie, a big, lovely one you can ride on."

"Like Gace's?" Jack asked.

"Yes. A saddle with stirrups for your little feet and all." Satisfied, the boy was his own gay little self again.

That evening Ned, Bessie and Grace drove over. Before Ann could stop him, Dick was telling of Jack's adventure, that he was going to see Grace to get the "horsie" she had promised him.

"Oh the darling!" Grace cried, catching him up in her arms.

Violently Ann tore him from her and said:

"If he had been killed it would have been your fault! Telling him if he came over you'd give him a horse. Don't you ever dare coax him again."

"Why Ann! What a temper! Your father and mother should see you. How did I know the darling would try to come over just because I said that?"

Ann had taken the invitation for granted, feeling sure something of the sort had been said to Jack. Now, paying no attention to Dick's black looks, to Ned's and Bessie's surprise, she carried Jack off to bed.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY

(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—I am a girl of 18 and am engaged to a boy of 23. We have been engaged for a month, and have planned to be married in a year. Everything has been going just fine, until I heard today that he has asked another girl to go with him to spend the day attending the Fourth of July celebration. If this is true I do not care to be engaged to him as if he has done that he is not dependable. If it is true, and he either lies to me, or says nothing to me, should I break the engagement?

BROKEN HEARTED BONNIE.

Broken Hearted Bonnie:—If this is true, and there is no other reason other than he would rather take the other girl than you, I think you are justified in breaking the engagement. But be sure that you are fair, and do not cause a scene. Give him every chance to explain it.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—I am engaged, and am spending the summer here with friends. My girl friend I am visiting plans parties and good times for me, and always has a boy friend of hers for me to go with. I do not think it is quite fair for me to do this, but I would certainly spoil all the good times if I did not. Shall I write and tell my fiance? What is your advice on this matter?

ROSEBURG VISITOR.

Roseburg Visitor:—Surely your fiance is broadminded enough not to wish to spoil all your good times this summer. Writte and tell him of everything you do.

Would Rather Fight Than Work

"I suffered for years with stomach trouble and could not eat, and just hated for anyone to say work to me. I would rather fight. Since taking a course of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy I actually want to work, and talk about eat. I am the last one to leave the table now." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucus from the intestinal tract and allays the inflammation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. One dose will convince or money refunded.

MOVIES

Antlers Theatre

Pauline Starke was selected for the heroine of "My Wild Irish Rose," at the Antlers tonight, because she is the perfect type for the Irish beauty. Her broad white forehed and svelt figure blends the charm which have made Irish women famous for their captivating physical attractions. She has the role of Moya, who is in love with Conn, the shaughraun, a role played by Pat O'Malley. The shaughraun possess a natural brogue that nothing short of a cheese knife could cut. Lithe and tall, the Celtic features of Pat O'Malley makes him exceptionally well fitted for the role.

"My Wild Irish Rose" is based upon "The Shaughraun," a famous stage success by Dion Boucicault which made a hit in Drury Lane Theatre in 1875, and at Wallack's Theatre the same year.

Liberty Theatre

Charles Ray is said to do the greatest acting of his entire career in "The Girl I Loved," his second United Artists production, which comes to the Liberty Theatre on Sunday for three days. The work of the star is given added zest by the fact that "The Girl I Loved" is the story of the personal love affair of the poet James Whitcomb Riley, as related in his poem of that title.

Th picture is the quintessence of romance, the tale of two masculine hearts that beat for one girl—one of then fiercely. The arder of this one (enacted by Charles Ray) brings into the plot many terrific incidents which serve to bring the star forward as at [illegible] emotional force.

Those who know film [illegible] recall that it was a [illegible] seven years ago which [illegible] lifted Mr. Ray into the [illegible] of stars.
