

$1.10 a Bushel FOR WHEAT

That is 20 cents a bushel above the market price, but we will take it at that price in exchange for any of the machinery mentioned in our last ad, or for paint as mentioned in the one before that. Did you read those ads? You want to get the habit of "watching our ads in the News-Review." You never know when you will find something in them that will save you money. That hay price still holds good on that machinery and paint, too. This is a chance you cannot afford to miss.

This is all good stuff, just the same as we sell right along, but we need the room and can use the wheat and hay.

See us first, we can save you money.

THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER X

Natalie was indignant that she should be treated so coldly just because she was five minutes late for luncheon. She felt a little guilty, too. Horace had warned her. But in her own room, examining the purchases she had made, she once again forgot to be peeved. Horace was so kind, so generous.

She would have liked to take all the pretty things, her new dinner dress to Mrs. Crandell, let her see them, talk them over.

"I could if she was like other folks," she said to herself. Then, on the spur of the moment, she ran down to the telephone and called Etta up.

"It's me, Natalie, and Etta, I want you to telephone me at 8 o'clock, and if we're not going out I want you to come over. I have bought slathers of pretty things today."

"All right, I'll phone," Etta answered, her voice excited. She had been afraid Horace Crandell's riches would make a difference in Natalie.

In her inexperience of her new mode of living Natalie had not had time to adjust her mind as to the course proper for her to take. The house, awed her, its size, its elegance in a small house or an apartment she would probably have taken her place easily, but here, where everything ran like clockwork, where servants moved suit-footed about, where meals were perfectly cooked and served without friction of any kind, she was at an utter loss.

She wanted to go all over the house, peer into everything, but she was afraid to. She would wait and talk to Horace first, find out all about things.

She knew she had made one or two blunders at luncheon, had used the wrong fork, and had pushed her plate away when finished instead of allowing it to remain before her until removed. Mrs. Crandell had noticed, had looked annoyed, and had glanced at her guest as if to see if she, too, had noticed her new daughter-in-law's lack of good manners.

The afternoon dragged. About 3 o'clock Natalie wandered downstairs and into the drawing room. A grand piano caught her attention, and, her face lighting, she opened it and sat down to play. Not that she could play, save a few hymns and chorals, but it was something to do.

She had struck but a few notes when Mrs. Crandell's maid appeared.

Stopped Here—Mrs. Estelle Cheffings, who has been employed at the Soldiers Home, left yesterday afternoon for points in California.

Returned Home—Mrs. James E. Perry, who has been visiting at the home of her daughter, Mrs. B. E. Cox, for the past ten days, returned to her home in Middle yesterday.

in the doorway.

"Mrs. Crandell requests you will not use the piano at this time. She is lying down. Then in a different voice: 'She always takes a nap, never wants any noise in the house until 4 o'clock, when she has tea.'"

Natalie rose at once, her face flushing.

"Thank you, I'll remember," she said, then again sought her own room.

"Oh, dear! What do rich people do with themselves?" she said, as she again admired her new things.

"I've been here only two days and am bored to death already. I wonder if Horace will let me take music lessons. I'll talk to him about it when he comes in."

She was standing in the landing, waiting, when she heard him. Just as she was about to run down and meet him his mother's door opened, and she called to him:

"I wish to see you at once, Horace."

"Yes, Mother." And as he ran lightly up stairs, Natalie retreated. He was with his mother but a few moments and, although he kissed her fondly, Natalie noticed how serious he looked.

"See all the pretty things I bought for you! I do hope you will like my dress."

"Yes, dear, we will look at them presently. I am very sorry you were late for luncheon, in spite of my warning. Mother is very much upset. Then you rather spoiled her nap. Try and be prompt at your meals hereafter, even if some of your errands remain undone. And never make any noise in the early afternoon. That was my fault; I should have told you of mother's habits. Now show me what you bought today."

Natalie held up her dress, showed him each article laid out for his inspection. But all her joy in them was gone. Horace had found fault with her.

But when she put on the really pretty dinner dress and he complimented her, kissing her fondly, she recovered her spirits. But when he said:

"Mother will approve of you tonight, darling," she lost them again. She wanted his approval, wanted him to say nice things to her, as he had on their honeymoon, without constantly dragging his mother into the conversation.

MOTORCYCLE RIDER BREAKS COLLAR BONE

Driving into the country last night to visit relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Randolph met with an accident at the corner near the rifle range in which the motorcycle went into the ditch and overturned, and in the fall Mr. Randolph suffered a broken collar bone. Mrs. Randolph, riding in the side car, was more fortunate, escaping with minor bruises. They were going east on the Deer Creek road, and attempting to make the turn going north failed to slow down sufficiently, and applying the brakes too quickly the machine went into the ditch. The motorcycle was only slightly damaged.

LOCAL ARTIST DRAWS MEMORIAL PICTURE FOR OREGONIAN

A beautiful memorial tribute to Warren G. Harding was carried on the front page of the Portland Oregonian today. The work was that of Jeff Teeter of Roseburg, who for several years has been employed in the art department of the Oregonian. The drawing displayed a wonderful artistic talent and was a fine expression of grief of the country at the loss of the late President.

Guest of Mrs. Powers—Mrs. Lillian Gary of Coquille, who has been the guest of Mrs. L. J. Powers at Hotel Empress, for several days, returned to her home this morning.

Widower Congratulated

"Since my wife's death, five years ago, I have suffered greatly from stomach and liver trouble and have lost over 50 pounds and my health was as yellow as wax. The doctors could not help me. I have entirely cured me. I have regained my weight and every one is congratulating me on how well I look. It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal matter from the intestinal tract and allows the natural motion which causes the stomach, liver and intestinal ailments including appendicitis. Do use it to convince or money back. This is a St. Paul, Minn. product."
