

Who Pays the Bill?

"I, said Mr. Consumer Gink; I with my pen and ink, I'll pay the bill."

Sure the consumer pays the bill, but why pay two bills for the same thing? The dealer's rent, interest, phone, taxes, clerk hire, etc., are all paid by the consumer in the price. If you buy part from one dealer and part from another, you force both of them to put a little more on the price. Buy all you can from one dealer and help cut the cost of handling staff; in other words, pay only one rent, one phone, one tax, and make the amount on each sack of feed smaller instead of larger.

Buy your feed, flour and farm machinery from us and make your share of the bill an small as possible. See us first. We can save you money.

CHAPTER XII
Etta had to examine all Natalie's purchases, see her rooms, and then they settled down for a chat.
"Now tell me about your husband's mother, do you like her?" Etta asked.
"I don't know her at all," Natalie said, whimsically. "I don't think I like her. But—perhaps I will when I get acquainted with her."
"I don't understand," Etta said. "She is very dignified, awfully aristocratic. I'm afraid of her. In a way, afraid I'll make some horrid mistake at the table; and, oh, Etta, what am I going to do with myself? She is Horace's mother. He seems to worship her, but I can't be natural, she holds me off so."
"What do you call her—Mother?" "Goodness, not I wouldn't dare. I don't think I have called her anything yet. She manages everything. I'm just like a boarder."
"Well, I shouldn't kick at that, but they had no say little parties as they had when he was courting her, and Natalie often longed to ask how he managed to leave his mother or then. But there was something about Horace when she spoke of his mother that made her afraid, to speak. He resented the slightest thing that looked like criticism. If he was disappointed at the continued coldness between her and Natalie, he never showed that feeling.
As he had predicted, the young woman Mrs. Crandell knew and approved of had called. But Natalie found herself strangely ill at ease. They talked of balls and parties, of tennis and golf, of amateur theatricals, not one of them subjects Natalie could discuss. They were from another world, and made her realize it. Even Mrs. Crandell could talk animatedly with them of all these things in which they were interested, and Natalie was antonized at her chum as she chatted about sports and society affairs.
"That's the reason she's so cold to me," Natalie said to herself, "she wants Horace to marry one of these—his own kind." That his mother did not want Horace to marry anyone never occurred to Natalie, and that it was in part jealousy of her that made her so cold and indifferent. Jealousy of her beauty, of the love Horace gave her.
The season was in full swing, and in spite of occasional little unpleasantnesses, Natalie and Mrs. Crandell had come to no open rupture.

MOVIES

Liberty Theatre
Life is a symphony of souls singing paeans of triumph, sobbing cries of misery, crooning lullabies of tenderness, caroling serenades of love, or trilling arias of ecstasy—"Breaking Home Time" is a symphony of life which echoes its melody in every heart and home.
Here is a drama that strikes home, for it deals with life as we all live it, and concerns the things we all know—home and parents and the tie that binds our thoughts and memories, however far we may roam, to the home circle and the parents who loved us. The plot is concerned with the romance of a man who must leave his country because of a misdeed, loses all trace of his parents and cannot enjoy his triumphs of love and success until the stigma is removed from his name and he locates his family. This and the special Harold Lloyd feature at the Liberty Theatre tomorrow and Wednesday.

Antlers Theatre
Jack London's famous novel of the prize ring, "The Abysmal Broke," has been filmed and comes to the Antlers Theatre tonight as a Universal-Jewel special production starring Reginald Denny, the hero of "The Leather Pushover." This story has for its chief male character a young man who is all that would be called a "real man." At the same time he is courteous, intelligent and possessed of a refined nature. Yet he is a prize-fighter, trained in the rough parties of the ring and supposedly saturated with its atmosphere. In view of the general prejudice among certain sensitive people against the boxing sport, and on the other hand, in view of the newer, cleaner ideals of the game, is this man a "gentleman?"
The heroine does not think so. She is an ultra-cultured, sophisticated creature of the most exclusive class. The role is an exceptionally strong

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY
(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am a 40-year-old bachelor and have a quite important problem to solve, so I thought I would ask your advice. There is an 18-year-old girl who is the daughter of a family I am on very familiar terms with. Although I thought of her only as a child, for the past few months she has been showing me very plainly that she thinks differently of me, and I have really grown to be very fond of her. Recently she practically threw herself at my head. Would I be justified in marrying her? I know that I would make her a good husband, probably better than some young fellow that she would marry. Will you give me an answer, V. V.
V. V.—You would be doing a very wrong thing if you married this girl. She is probably feeling an infatuation for you that is very common among girls of her age for an older man. Most girls go through it. She is too young to know what love is, and if you take advantage of her youth at this time, she, and no doubt you also, will be sorry for it later. She should be given an opportunity to grow and develop and meet someone of her own age, whom she could grow to love in the way a woman should.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am only sixteen years old, but I know what I want to make my career in life. I want to teach physical education. My mother and father say I am too young to know what I want to do. Do you think I am? How should I go about learning it now? F.
F.—No you are not too young to know what interests you, and what you want to make your life work. You may change your mind later, but if you do not, so much the better. Study and read everything you can get on physical education, and work to make yourself healthy and physically strong. Study hard in school on all subjects, so that you will have a good education. A teacher must be broad and cultured in all subjects.

"THAT'S GOOD—GO ON"
Stiff and cold today are the noble lips
That left us this command,
"That's good—go on."
To strengthen and sustain the stricken land.
"That's good—go on, America personified,
He asked no quarter, nor relief
From endless care; mortal frame
could bear no more,
And God called home the nation's weary chief.
His last words, the nation's deathless legacy,
To finish well each task, nor to be satisfied
With one thing well done, but to go on to higher planes,
And so today we mourn our chief with pride,
Reverently we low our heads,
Pride shines in each misty eye,
Our President was every inch a man,
His legacy can never, never die.

FOREST FIRE NEAR COQUILLE

MARSHFIELD, Aug. 13.—A report from Coquille this morning stated that about 20 acres of down timber in the Prosper Mill company logging camp across from Coquille had been burned over in a fire that started yesterday in the logged-over area. How great the damage will be is not known. The fire will probably be curbed as soon as it reaches the green timber. Not much damage was done to the rigging or equipment.
A report from Powers stated that the fire at Camp Four on Salmon creek was ended. It burned about 60 feet of timber. The other damage was small aside from the cost of fighting the blaze.
The Kol lake fire is still burning.

REUNION IS HELD

A number of Spanish-American war veterans of this city spent yesterday in Portland where they enjoyed the old Second Oregon reunion. Over 200 of the Oregon veterans who participated in the capture of Manila, August 13, 1898, were present. The reunion and picnic was held in Laurelhurst park.
