CANAL IN NEED OF AIR FORCE

There are certain well defined weaknesses in the Panama canal defenses—these are:
Susceptibility of certain vital parts to damage by bombs carried by aircraft.
Grouping of the coast defense artillery too close together to prevent attacking vessels which have once gained control of the sea and air from reaching positions that will permit firing on the Miraflores locks.
Lack of sufficient aircraft in canal defenses to insure immunity from attack by enemy bombers should a base be obtained within striking distance.
The necessity for more complete liaison between the army and navy forces, especially in communications, information concerning enemy forces and means for recognizing same.
The necessity for dissemination of information to our own forces.
Where information is necessary or desirable in order that our own forces may act intelligently this information must be disseminated even at the risk of the enemy obtaining it.
The need for improving our fleet communications, both radio and visual.
The necessity for balancing our fleet by addition of:
(a) Scouting cruisers,
(b) Destroyer leaders,
(c) The necessity for having a sustained speed of at least twelve knots per hour.
(d) Fleet submarines.
(e) All auxiliaries that will accompany the fleet.
(f) The necessity for more maneuverability of this nature for fleet training.
The necessity of denying to any possible enemy a base within aircraft striking distance of the canal.
The desirability of solving the question of establishing by suitable treaties, aircraft base or bases at points within striking distance of the canal.
The necessity for looking ahead as to the probable and possible developments in submarines and aircraft. The performance of our eighteen seaplanes in making the long trip from Hampton Roads to the canal zone and then two days after arrival, all of them being on the scouting line looking for the enemy, and the performance of our submarines in making the 2,600 mile trip from San Diego to the canal zone involving nearly three weeks at sea, shows the possibility of a future enemy to neither who it might be, being able to bring to our shores both air forces and submarines from considerable distances hereinafter considered for the farther development of our own air and submarine forces, in order that we may adequately defend our coast and preserve the integrity of the Panama canal, the keeping of which in operative order is a vital importance to the country.

MERCHANTS WARNED OF CHECK ARTIST

Merchants of this city are being warned to be on the lookout for William Anderson, who is alleged to be a bad check artist. Anderson travels under aliases of Ralph Wilson, Ralph Foster, Paul Frinatrook, J. S. Lee, William Kelley and others. This party is 22 to 28 years of age, height 5 feet 7 inches, with narrow complexion and light brown hair. He is supposed to be a user of cocaine. He acts as a salesman, and also claims that he is employed by the federal secret service.

Anderson drives a late model Buick touring car, with front seats out to turn back to make a bed; has blankets under rear seat and luggage rack on running board. He has been using California license plates which were stolen, and is supposed to have an Ohio registration card in the name of William Anderson, in the car, and perhaps Ohio license plates under the rear seat.

NEW MODEL BUICK IS SHOWN TODAY

O. C. Baker, local Buick agent, returned last night from Portland with one of the new 1924 model six-cylinder cars which he will use for demonstration purposes. The new car is one of the most beautiful the Buick people have ever put out and has a number of new features and improvements, chief of which is the new four-wheel brake with large brake drums on all four wheels giving greater ease in handling and more safety. The body is larger and a new oiling system for the engine has been adopted. Mr. Baker had the new demonstrator on the streets today and it attracted considerable attention.

Will Return Soon—Miss Katherine Slatta, who has been visiting in San Francisco and other points in California for the past several months will return to Roseburg the latter part of this week or the first of next.
