ROSEBURG, OREGON, TUESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1923.

PORTLAND SETS A FINE EXAMPLE.

Portland, the banner city of the northwest and metropolis of all Oregon, has set a fine example in assembling an advertising fund of three hundred thousand dollars to put that city and the state at large on the map during the coming year. And it was no boy's job to put the task over. It took a lot of hard work on the part of a few energetic fellows who believe in the future of this state, who have unfaltering faith in its resources and are anxious that no stone be left unturned that will redound to the growth of their immediate community and all other sections of the state.

In accumulating this large amount of money many obstacles were met. Some of the largest and most influential concerns of Portland refused to subscribe one cent toward the fund. Though the city and state had provided them with opportunities in the past for gaining large fortunes and blessed them with all that nature can provide, they were unappreciative of this fact and unwilling to aid in a financial way any movement for the betterment of their home city, or the people of the state, by refusing to go on record for any sum of money whatsoever of the three hundred thousand dollars secured.

This refusal of assistance, however, on the part of substantial business interests has an excellent moral. It demonstrates that no small set of men, no matter how powerful their financial influence can stem the tide of progress set by any live community, or its people, in carrying on so great a work as that advanced by the city of Portland. And this example applies to large and small communities alike. Portland has told its few unpatriotic and unappreciative business men that the city can grow and prosper without their approval, and with their disapproval of every effort put forward to advance the city's interests. The achievement is a wonderful victory for Portland people. It is a fine thing to let go of those appendages that are likely to carry rot to the core and destroy an otherwise healthful growth.

Portland has forgotten them. They are lost in the whirlwind of progress and prosperity. Their influence has been stilled and the city will go forward to a greater and far more substantial area of progress than could have been possible with a clique of crepehangers hanging on to the city's door knob.

The state at large should feel proud of the mother city of this great state and lend all possible aid to its permanent advancement.

One hundred thousand dollars has been found in a tin can, supposedly the property of Slacker Grover Bergdoll. The tidy sum was picked up by a common laborer who is far more worthy of the fortune than the original owner. The lucky discoverer ought to send the tin can to Grover as a token of esteem for his services during the late World War.

—o—

World troubles will greatly subside when every man is willing to give the very best that is in him to his home, his community and his employer. No wonder the country is upset with two-thirds of the people resting on the sidelines and the other third traveling the pace that kills.

It's about time for another outbreak at the state penitentiary—or an ultimatum, as the case may be. But probably the inmates figure that it is too warm for any great exertion and are waiting for a lower degree in temperature.

When elderly men get into a mixup and the difficulty is settled by striking one or the other on the head with a shovel it is evidence the aggressor has passed into his second childhood.

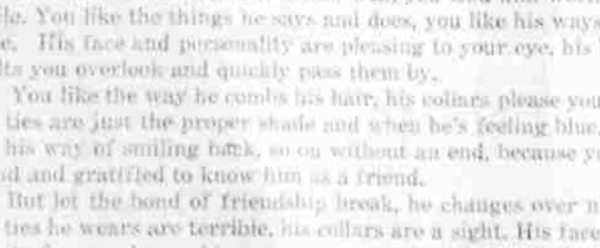
We often wonder why some people take a vacation.



Dear Folks:

You have a friend and love him well, you find him worth the while. You like the things he says and does, you like his ways and style. His face and personality are pleasing to your eye, his little faults you overlook and quickly pass them by.

You like the way he combs his hair, his collars please you too. His ties are just the proper shade and when he's feeling blue, you like his way of smiling back, so on without an end, because you're proud and gratified to know him as a friend.

But let the bond of friendship break, he changes over night. The ties he wears are terrible, his collars are a sight. His face will lose its former charm, his ways grow mean and small. The virtues that he used to have, you find he's lost them all. His faults are great and numerous and when he's feeling blue, his smile is forced and cynical, that's how it seems to you. The things you thought were right and good take on another look, and all because his name, as friend, you've torn out of your book.

You've found it so? I know you have, it happens more than once. It makes the man you thought was wise, appear just like a dunce. It brings a truth and those who look within are sure to find, our eyes bring but reflections of the things we have in mind.

GOOD EVENING FOLKS—
Last Year this
Colyum conducted
A He Beauty Contest
And the sheiks of
The village were all sore
At ye ed. over
The outcome and this
Season we will
Not attempt to pick
The prize male vamp
But on the contrary
Will devote our
Undivided time to
The selection of
The Umpqua Valley's
Best bathing damsel
And the contestants
Must be attired
In suits made from
Flour sacks as many
A poor jane with
Beautiful eyes has
Been crowded out of
Beauty contests simply
Because she couldn't afford
To get an outfit
Of glad rags that would
Knock the judges
For a row
Of lipsticks and so
Goils if you wish
To enter Prune Pickin's
Bathing Beauty Contest
All you hafta do
Is to cut
Arm, leg and neck holes
In a gunny sack and
Show up at this sanctum
Any p. m. at three o'clock
To be judged for the judges
Are to be

OUR MOVIE REVIEW.

Subject: "The Lost Corn Flake." Author: Kellogg. Type: Serial.

This scenario was written for the purpose of proving that the sealed package keeps out moisture, Alho it was penned in Battle Creek, Michigan, it is not a war picture. In the first two reels the hero takes too manys shots of corn (flakes), and becoming groggy he sinks to the lower levels of life, finally ending up as a Post Toasties addict. The action of the drama, from the time the corn is picked until it is flaked, is quite rapid and movie lovers who delight in seeing something spectacular will receive an orful wallop from the scene where the puffed rice is shot from the cannons giving it its meaty flavor.

A bunch of aluminum fellers are practicin' fer a play which is called "The Flour Shop" and we hope it raises the dough.

In order to stimulate attendance it has been suggested that the next council meeting be held in somebody's cellar as the hot weather is taking the pep out of the council sessions and if the gathering is held in the proper cellar there is no doubt but what it will end up as a howling success.

Hurry up kids and have a good time while ya can. School opens next month.

The feller who wears sleeve-holders and peg top pants doesn't worry over the fall styles for men folks.

After spending fifteen minutes trying to make a four line pome rhyme we gave up the struggle in disgust and unless the meter is working better by tomorrow this colyum will celebrate a pomeless week which should add joy to the readers who are forced to wade through this swamp of bunk each evening.

When eating watermelons be sure and spit out the seeds, always being careful to shoot them under the table or back of the stove, as very few housewives like to have the slippery little devils in the middle of the kitchen where they are liable to trip over 'em.

OUR DAILY RECIPE.

My darling, dearest, sweetest, honey-Duck ed. of Proones: Will you kindly tell me how I can cook tough corn so my family can eat it? DARDANELLA.

Ans. Cut out the mush stuff, Dardy, this isn't a lovelorn colyum. In case the corn kernals are tough, place a cold chisel at each plate.

Some of the awnings on the main drag are so flimsy that they wouldn't even do for a peekaboo waist.

These cluster lights should be here some of these days so purchase your smoked glasses now.

Start saving up now for the Thanksgiving turkey, the cranberry sauce will take care of itself.

Hossifer Ike Ketch is going to have his uniform trimmed in fur for the winter months and a pair of mittens with strings attached will be provided by the council.

"Many a feller spoils his makeup by not havin' his shoes shined."

STATE PRESS COMMENT

Low Gasoline Prices

Cheaper gasoline gives every automobile owner a pleasant feeling, but it is by no means an unmixed blessing.

The cheaper gasoline is, the more rapidly the available supply will be wasted. And when the gasoline bearing petroleum is gone, it is doubtful whether mankind will ever again have such a convenient source of energy to drive his machinery.

The cheaper it is the less incentive there will be to improve the internal combustion engine and increase the efficiency of motor cars, motor boats and airplanes. There is no more important problem today than such improvement. Thus progress is retarded for the sake of a little present gain. More miles per gallon would be better, everything considered, than fewer cents per gallon.

This is not saying that gasoline should not be sold to consumers at the lowest price consistent with a legitimate profit to producers and distributors. When the fuel is making such big fortunes for the other two sides of the economic triangle, the consumer should have his share of the benefit. But it will be no misfortune, in the long run, if the price rises again somewhat, before long, in accordance with economic law—as it is likely to do.—Albany Democrat.

A Twelve-Mile Limit

Extension of the three-mile limit to include the right of search and seizure of foreign vessels within 12 miles of the United States coast is said to be likely to meet with British approval.

Objection to this suggestion comes chiefly from the British admiralty which fears that should this concession be made to the United States other nations would demand similar advantage to the detriment of Great Britain. It seems hardly likely that this will be the case, however, for this extension of the three-mile limit is arranged between this government and that of Great Britain because a condition exists in this country with regard to enforcement of prohibition laws which does not exist in other countries.

Great Britain will be taking a broad view of the matter and doing this nation a real service if the suggested increase of the three-mile limit is agreed upon. It will give American enforcement authorities a much wider latitude in which to work and the added distance which it will force the rum fleet from shore will make smuggling difficult.—Corvallis Gazette-Times.

Harrisburg a Paradise

The Albany Democrat infers that the Bulletin will be claiming Harrisburg as the original garden of Eden now that this town is growing fig trees. And true enough it might have been, but today we know it best as Paradise.—Harrisburg Bulletin.

Helping the Farmer

Every now and then we have an era of "back to the land," but the indications are that the distance between the "then" and "now" will be of considerable length unless conditions change. At present the farmer is getting the worst of the deal, in fact the situation is alarming. Any prosperity that does not include the tiller of the soil is unsound, shifting and dangerous, for agriculture is the foundation of our well being.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace declares that the present condition is a disease, which he describes as "the distorted relationship between the prices of farm products and prices of other commodities." Glib-mouthed politicians and agitators have offered various and sundry remedies, including price-fixing by the government, the outright purchase and storage of wheat, and a few other silly things. Mr. Wallace offers no remedy at present, but says that it is a question that requires careful study.

In the first place it must be remembered that you can not cure the sore by healing over. Too much of that has been done already by appropriating millions to the wool, cattle and cotton speculators. Very little of the money furnished by the government ever reached the actual producer; it went to clear up the debts of the men who had borrowed on their purchases from the producer at ruinous prices.—Eugene Guard.

There is a movement all over the country to secure more beet sugar factories. Ohio, which now has only five, is attempting to multiply her number; so is Illinois with now only one, Indiana with one, Iowa with three, Nebraska with five, and Kansas and Minnesota with one each—and a number of other states.

The movement is in the interest of self-containment in this industry in our own country and our possessions. The people of Salem, and of the other cities and towns in the Willamette valley should be active and watchful in respect to this movement. The Salem district may secure a number of factories, supplied from beets grown in Marion, Polk, Yamhill, Washington, Benton, Clackamas, Linn and other counties.—Oregon Statesman.

Fifty-Cent Shave

The Albany Democrat gives currency to the complaint of a tourist that it cost him 50 cents in Portland for a shave and 75 cents to get his straw hat painted. It might have been a good idea first to get the facts from Portland. Shaves here cost uniformly 25 cents and the cost of getting a straw hat painted depends entirely upon the artistic effect aimed at. If, for instance, it was to be covered with a design of roses it might be as much as 75 cents.—Oregon Journal.

IOWA PUTS BAN ON "ORIENTAL DANCE"

County Fair Managers Warned the State Will Insist on Keeping Midway Clean.

(International News Service.)

DES MOINES, Ia., Aug. 27.—Fatima has sold her seven veils and is learning to make circus lemonade, the sideshow "barkers" are practicing new words for the old music, and the callow youths of the great outdoors are henceforth to be cheated of seeing the Sultan's favorite in action.

"This way, gents, see Texico, the muscle-dancing beauty," is going to be a bally-ho man's dream of the past in Iowa if the plans of Roy H. Wilkinson, secretary of the Iowa Fair Managers' Association, are carried out.

In a pronunciamento sent to all county fair managers Wilkinson advises them that Attorney General Gibson, of Iowa, has declared the popular tents "for men only" the old time bunco games for gullible yokels and the dancing shows where girls are employed to dance with male patrons are not allowable under State laws and must be discontinued.

"No fair can afford to lose state aid, so keep your midway clean," Wilkinson stated. "Eliminate the Oriental dancing shows."
