THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER XXVII

Naturally Natalie said nothing of her drive with Craig Harper, and as naturally nothing of her promise to assist at the street fair. Horace did not speak to her, his mother only before the servants, then only in a simple cold word of greeting when they met in the dining room.

That Mrs. Crandell had demanded she apologize Natalie was sure. But Natalie was just as sure she never would. Now the reputation that had gone on ever since she was married was increased. Natalie, with Craig Harper, or Rita Blackwell, was inartistic. The season was nearly over, and since the estrangement Mrs. Crandell had entertained but once, a large dinner party, during which Natalie had sat silent save to answer "yes" or "no" when spoken to. The dinner over, she had wept bitterly in the privacy of her own room.

"I am getting worse and worse," she declared. "I never shall be anybody in this crowd. Oh, I wish I didn't love Horace so. I'd go back to the office tomorrow. If I didn't. But he'd never forgive me if I even spoke of it. Things are bad enough—but I would be happier. It's where I belong. I don't belong here."

Natalie had made one or two timid overtures to Horace, but with a stern face he had pretended not to notice. That he, too, was unhappy, that he longed to take her in his arms, his wife had no way of knowing. That a lifetime of absolute devotion to his mother, to her whims and desires, had been behind his action, as well as the feeling of what youth owed to age so thoroughly a part of his character, Natalie was incapable of understanding. Her own mother had been a busy, practical soul, something of a slave to her husband and children, a woman of no force of character, no initiative. And she was the only woman Natalie knew well enough to draw a comparison with, the only woman near Mrs. Crandell's age.

That cold, impassive nature, whose only weakness was her intense love and jealousy of her only son, and her devotion to society, her conventionalism, was a foreign language to Natalie.

The day of the fair arrived, clear, beautiful. Natalie had spared no time, no expense to procure her costume, and she was dazzlingly beautiful as the Spanish girl. She dressed, threw a dark cloak over her costume, and left the house unobserved. She had given no thought that Mrs. Crandell and Horace might attend the fair. She hoped that they would and see her. But her cheeks flushed, her heart beat faster as she thought of Beverly Rainford, the girl who had told Horace she was going to ask her to assist, then never mentioned it.

Craig and the others in his booth, welcomed her with expressions of delight. They raved over her costume. Craig told her she was sure to be the Queen of the affair, that no one could compare with her. Not until late in the afternoon did she see Beverly, and then she looked up to see her, Horace at her side, standing in front of the booth, his face set and angry, hers filled with surprise.

Craig stood beside her, she knew he was watching her. After a little gasp, she offered her wares for sale, saying: "Buy some cigarettes, Horace."

Crandell laid down some money, took what she offered him, and then said: "I shall take you home, Natalie, Mrs. Rainford will excuse me."

"But I'm—"

"Come." And without another word she left the booth, walking silent beside him until they reached his car standing at the curb. Horace helped her in, seated himself beside her, and in silence they drove home. There he said: "It is necessary we have a talk. Natalie, as much as I dislike the idea, I want it understood that you shall not make yourself a subject of gossip so long as you are my wife. This affair of yours with Craig Harper must stop at once. I know of your drives with him, that you have lunched in public places. I want your word of honor that you will not be seen with him again."

"And I shall not give it! You treat me like an outcast, then ask me to give up a friendship in which I have pleasure. I'll leave you first, go back to work. At least I was happy in the office, happier than I ever have been in this house! You choose your friends. I shall choose mine." Natalie was furious.

This New Treatment Gives Absolute Relief from All Pain and Suffering. Guaranteed by Nathan Fullerton, The Rexall Store, Roseburg, Ore.

Perhaps the most amazing discovery of recent years in the field of medicine is the discovery that Piles or Hemorrhoids can now be successfully treated and cured at home by a wonderful substance to which the name of MOAVA has been given.

For years it had been known that many so-called remedies were simply palliative and gave only temporary relief, while surgical operations, often adopted as a last resource, did not remove the cause, but simply the formation, in no wise acting on the source of the trouble.

The discoverers of MOAVA, justly proud of their amazing discovery, are all anxious to have the world know that a cure for hemorrhoids is now within the grasp of every sufferer, and that a cure is possible without the use of any of the old-fashioned, painful, and dangerous methods.

Each little suppository of MOAVA reaches the exact point of irritation, soothing, healing and curing every case of hemorrhoids, no matter how long they have existed, and without the use of any of the old-fashioned, painful, and dangerous methods.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY

(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—When a girl in a small town goes out with a stranger do they talk about it? Is a girl of 19 old enough to do this? If a girl goes out to dinner with a man, should she meet him down town or should he come to her home for her? RED.

Red:—Just because everyone in town does not know the man you go out with is no reason for them to talk about it. If he is a friend of yours, a nice respectable man, that you have met in a correct way, there is nothing wrong in going out with him. A girl of 19 is old enough to go out with her friends if her parents approve. If you happen to be down town shopping in the afternoon and wish to meet him for dinner it is alright. But if you are at home he should come after you.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—I don't think many boys write to you for advice but here is one that is going to. I like a nice girl very much, and she seems to like me. I have a car. My mother and I live together, and when I go out with anyone else it leaves my mother alone. I take her with me a lot when I haven't a girl. Does it make a girl angry when you take your mother along, and does it look silly? Of course I don't have to take her all the time, but lots of times I hate to leave her alone. What does a girl think about it? WORRIED YOUNG MAN.

Worried Young Man:—If she is the right kind of a girl she will be delighted to have your mother along, and her respect for you will increase when she sees how thoughtful and kind you are to your mother. There is nothing silly about it, it is just one of the finest things you could do.

To Visit Daughter—Mrs. Anna Wood arrived here yesterday from Portland and will visit with her daughter, Mrs. R. A. Calhoun for several weeks. Mrs. Wood is planning on locating in Roseburg.

Over From Oakland—Mrs. J. W. Davison, who is a resident of Oakland, was over yesterday shopping and visiting with friends.

In Shopping—Miss Marion Smith was in town yesterday from Looking Glass shopping and attending to other business.

To Visit In Portland—Mrs. Jane Lutman left this morning by auto for Portland where she will visit with friends and relatives for a week or ten days.

To Visit Here—Kelley Russell arrived yesterday from Bremerton, Washington, and will visit for several days with his aunt, Mrs. J. Harralson. Mr. Russell will also visit with Mrs. N. P. Sickmann of North Bend. He is with the U. S. S. New York at Bremerton.

Visiting at Seattle—Mrs. Carl Berger left on the morning train today for Seattle, where she will remain for a couple of weeks visiting with her sisters and other relatives of the Washington city.

Raffety In City—T. A. Raffety and wife, former residents of this city but now of Salem, spent the day in Roseburg visiting with friends.
