THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER XXVIII

In spite of what had happened, Horace stared at his wife, unbelievably.

"I am your husband, and more competent to judge these things than you are. My name, my mother's name, never has been spoken in connection with any scandal. I shall not permit it to be spoken of so now."

"You don't love me! Never have loved me. What you wanted to marry me for is beyond me!" Natalie stormed. "You brought me here to this town, set me down in it, then thought I was fool enough to be satisfied. I am young, I want life. What good is all your money? Tell me that! You and your cold mother what have you done to make me happy? What kind of a life have I led? I hate it all! Hate it. I tell you!"

Horace had listened to her tirade in silence, but when she finished he, too, for the first time, lost control of himself. He ordered Natalie not to disobey him, declared he would lock her up, insisted she apologize to his mother, give up all communication with Craig Harper, and conduct herself as his wife, according to the laws he laid down.

"I'll leave you!" Natalie threatened again. "Then you can marry that piece of property you have always been in love with. Beverly Rainford shows she would be willing. You have no right to dictate to me! I won't stand it!"

Before Horace turned and left her their quarrel had become very bitter. Natalie taunted him in her old fashion, the veneer of the last few months dropped from her, and she talked as she did in the old days before she knew him. Horace, equally as bitter, his anger at white heat, said things that seared and maddened Natalie.

That night, while he played chess with his mother, Natalie packed her trunk, selecting only her plainest clothes. Then, dressed in a dark suit and close hat, she crept down the stairs and out onto the street. She went at once to a boarding house for working girls she knew of, took a room, using her maiden name. She called herself "Mrs. Horton."

In the morning she went to the offices of the law firm for whom she had worked before her marriage.

Here she asked for Mr. Marshall, reminding him of his promise to employ her should she ever want to come back, told him she called herself "Horton" to avoid comment, and before noon was re-established at her old desk.

Mr. Marshall had asked her if she were sure she wanted to return, had told her he did not wish to be curious, but had she thought what it would mean to leave the luxurious life she had been living and return to that of an office girl.

Natalie assured him on this point, said she had left Horace, that she never would go back to him. Then she begged Mr. Marshall not to speak of it again.

"Does your husband know you intended to come here?" her former employer asked.

"No."

"We still serve as his lawyers. He may come in."

"Your clients are always announced. I can disappear. If you don't want me, Mr. Marshall, don't hesitate to say so—it will be unpleasant or uncomfortable for you."

"I do want you, Mrs. Crand—Mrs. Horton. I never have succeeded in finding a secretary who pleased me since you left. I was only thinking of you."

So it was arranged, and Natalie, less than a year after she left, was back in her old position.

She communicated with no one for a week, then she went to see Etta, to her astonishment, Etta censured her strongly and advised her to go back to Horace.

"You know he and his mother were different when you married him," she told her. "I know it was hard in some ways, but you loved Horace and you are his wife. You had everything in the world you wanted, and perhaps if you had tried you could have been friends with the old lady. Whether you could or not, I don't see how you should leave Horace. There's no one, nothing in the world, could drive me away from Clyde."

"You don't understand, Etta. I never belonged there. I was a 'misfit,' just as Mrs. Crandell said, always would be."

Natalie answered wearily. Even Etta couldn't understand.

Tomorrow—Good Resolutions Come to Naught

It will be understood that it requires some experience to play opposite him. In this picture dauntless "Dong" performs numberless miraculous stunts for the sake of the girl and so splendidly has she carried out her part in the picture that stardom is shortly to be awarded.

TOMMY GIBBONS TO BE HERE SEPT. 6

Famous Boxer to Appear at Antlers Theatre in Connection With One of Bills Offered By Pantages.

Tommy Gibbons, who is declared by all sport writers to have the best chance with Dempsey for the heavyweight title, and who is earnestly endeavoring to secure a return match with the champion, is to appear at the Antlers theatre in this city on the 6th of September as the headliner of a five-act Pantages vaudeville bill. The management of the theatre is to be congratulated on securing this fine entertainment for the acts that are being presented are winning exceptionally high praise in the newspapers wherever they appear. Gibbons, of course, is the main attraction and he demonstrates his ability in boxing a few rounds with one of his sparring partners.

Usually when a vaudeville bill carries one such headliner as Gibbons the balance of the entertainment is of a mediocre nature, but the critics in Portland and elsewhere give the other acts equal praise. The three Gellis boys, French athletes and gymnasts, put on a clever act. El Coltra, a xylophonist comedian is described as being a riot. "The Spectacular Septette," is a musical number of more than ordinary brilliance, presented by the seven Wrights. "The Quaker Oatmeal" is a most unusual and novel dance number. Webber and Elliott have a harmoniously and highly amusing act and Wilfrid DuBois does some clever juggling stunts.

Altogether the bill is reported to be one of the best the Pantages circuit has offered and Roseburg theatregoers will have a real treat.

CHURCH TO HOLD ALL-DAY MEETING

As a final service for this conference year, the Looking Glass Methodist church will hold an all day meeting on Sunday, September 2. Sunday school with classes for all ages will be opened at 10 o'clock, followed by preaching services at 11 o'clock. Rev. N. M. Shrode, pastor of the Looking Glass and Billard churches, will have charge of the services. Several candidates will be presented for baptism and the doors of the church will be opened for those seeking membership.

In the afternoon the meeting will be in charge of the Epworth League and a good program is being prepared by the young people. A basket dinner will be served at noon on the school house lawn and a cordial invitation is extended to anyone interested in the meetings to come and participate in the day's services. A special invitation has been extended to the congregations at Billard and Ten Mile.

Rev. Mr. Shrode is finishing the second year of his ministry in this vicinity and goes to the conference with a splendid report of the work accomplished and an earnest desire on the part of the parishioners that he be returned for another year, should his health permit of his remaining in the work.

DR. WADE AND MISS BECHTLE MARRIED

A quiet home wedding, performed in the presence of only the immediate members of the families and a few friends, took place yesterday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Wade on Short Street, when their son Dr. Charles B. Wade, was united in marriage to Miss Hilda Bechtle, a well known and popular young nurse of this city. County Judge Quine officiated.

Dr. Charles Wade is one of the best known and successful physicians of this city. He has been located in Roseburg for a number of years as a physician and has a very fine practice. He served in the U. S. Navy during the world war and received a commission in the medical department and was appointed to a responsible position.

His bride is a graduate nurse and has been employed at Mercy hospital in this city for over a year. She came to this city from Portland.

Immediately following the ceremony Dr. and Mrs. Wade left for Seattle where they will spend a week or ten days on their wedding trip.
