THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER XXXVIII
The need of finding work pressed heavily upon Natalie, but she was leader, both physically and mentally. She decided to remain in bed until noon. The maid came up, brought her some coffee, and a morning paper. Natalie scanned it fitfully. From force of habit she looked at the "Society Column." Horace Crandell and his mother were about to sail for Europe. She smiled a twisted smile as she read, seeing Mrs. Crandell's fine handwriting.

"Mrs. Crandell, accompanied by Mr. Horace Crandell, will spend the summer in Europe. We regret to learn that Mrs. Crandell has not been to the best of health of late. After seeing his mother settled, Mr. Crandell will return."

So Horace was going abroad. Natalie recalled how he had planned the trip they would sometime take, their "deferred wedding trip," he termed it. Now she never would see Europe, all those wonderful places he had described to her. Weak, Natalie's tears fell at the thought. She was like a child missing a promised pleasure, a wanted toy. She was in that most dangerous of all moods. She was sorry for herself.

A note came from Craig Harper, apologizing, begging forgiveness. Natalie tore it up angrily, throwing the bits of paper on the floor. A box of flowers he had sent with it she gave to the maid, who went out of the room muttering that Miss Horton must have quarreled with her beau. All unknown to Natalie, the boarders, as well as the maid, had spoken of Craig as "her beau."

Noon came and passed yet she still kept her bed. Tomorrow she would feel better, and find work. She would find another boarding place also, where Craig Harper, his notes and flowers could not find her.

Late in the afternoon the maid came up, told her Mr. Harper was downstairs, wanted to see her.

"Tell him I shall not see him. Say it just like that," Natalie told the maid. She crept to the door and listened. Craig was arguing, tipping probably, for she heard the maid's "Thank you, sir." The maid came back. She said:

"He must see you," Miss Horton says he must see you."

Natalie leaned over the banisters.

Loudly, so Craig could hear, she said:

"I shall never receive that man. You may tell him so."

A sarcastic laugh floated up to her as, without waiting for the maid to come back, the front door opened, then closed. Craig was gone, and this time, Natalie felt sure, for good. But she felt no elation, only the insult of his coming, as she crept shivering back to bed.

That night Natalie was really ill. Her landlady sent for a doctor and for three days Natalie remained in bed, and for two more was unable to leave the house. Another week none, a doctor to pay, and no sign of a position.

"I must find work. I have to or starve," she said as she counted her money, not more than, as Horace's wife, she had spent for some trifle without giving it a thought!

It never, in the old days, had been difficult for Natalie to find work, but then she had been free to give her last employer as a reference. That she could not do, not even after Horace left for Europe. It wasn't fair now, after her talk with Mr. Marshall.

Natalie felt rather desperate when next she started out, but at the very first place she applied she found work. The pay was small. She did not like the looks of the ferret-eyed man who hired her, but she dared not refuse the opening. He had smiled rather knowingly when she told him she had left a secretarial position of her own free will, and that for personal reasons she could give no references. She told him what Mr. Marshall paid her, told him she doubted if she could live on what he offered. He only reiterated it was all his position could pay—until she proved she was worth more to him. He said the last with a leer, but Natalie was too busy with her thoughts to notice, too busy calculating if she could possibly live on what he offered.

She was to report for work the next morning, and spent the remainder of the day finding another, a cheaper boarding place.

That night Mrs. Horace Crandell slept in a hall bedroom on the fourth floor of a cheap boarding house, while on the Avenue her husband paced back and forth in her luxurious room grieving for her.

Tomorrow—Polignant Loneliness

MOVIES

Antlers Theatre

Rupert Hughes' new photoplay, "Souls for Sale," which he pictured from his own novel of movie life in Hollywood for Goldwyn in the "Show Shop" of bloom. What James Forbes' play did for the stage, Mr. Hughes' "Souls for Sale" does for motion pictures. This film has been booked for the Antlers Theatre, and will open there tonight for two days.

Although the story deals with life and events of the motion picture colony, Mr. Hughes has not forgotten how to be easy, natural and human in the telling of his tale. It possesses an abundance of all those qualities which have endeared him, both as a novelist and motion picture author-director, to the American public. In addition to the to-be-expected and greatly admired qualities of Mr. Hughes, one may find in "Souls for Sale" his conception of what the screen spectacle should be, revealed in the destruction by fire and storm of a great modern circus, covering 11 acres of ground. This forms the dramatic and highly romantic climax of this realistic story of motion picture people.

Majestic Theatre

Enough gold braid and ornamentation to stretch from Hollywood to San Pedro, a distance of about 30 miles, it is said, glittered on the uniforms and costumes of the hundreds of people who take part in the scenes of the new Paramount picture, "The Dictator," in which Wallace Reid stars at the Majestic Theatre tonight. Kalla Pasha, playing a South American general, Theodore Kosloff, in a handsome uniform as a revolutionist officer; Alan Hale as a dandy who wears fancy Spanish carb, several extra generals and lesser officers and a host of soldiers were all emblazoned with fancy braid. It was declared that the city's supply of gold braid, bullion fringe and ginn was nearly exhausted during the filming of this picture.

Liberty Theatre

One of the most artistic and lavish productions yet made by Cosmopolitan Productions is its film version of Vicente Blasco Ibañez's latest novel, "Enemies of Women," which will be screened for the last time tonight at the Liberty Theatre. Cosmopolitan has made every effort to make "Enemies of Women" one of the most beautiful pictures ever made. The action of the picture takes place in Monte Carlo, in Nice, Paris and Russia. In order to have the locations entirely accurate, the entire company was sent to Europe and spent six weeks in Monte Carlo, Nice and Paris.

The famous Spanish novelist himself aided Director Alan Crosland in obtaining permission from the authorities of Monte Carlo to take scenes at the Casino, on the terrace of the gardens as well as scenes of the Prince of Monaco's palace. The result is that "Enemies of Women" on the scenic side is a thing of beauty.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY

(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—Will dresses be long or short this winter? How long should I have a new evening dress made, and what kind of material will be good? I am 18.

ROBERTA.

Roberta:—You will be wise, I think, to have the dress quite long, ankle length at least. Although the latest Paris fashion notes decree short dresses, even for evening gowns, I hardly think the fashion will reach the west for another year at least. If you are very slender, I would suggest taffeta. If you do not care for taffeta, one of the many silk crepes combined with lace would be pretty.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—In a case of this kind what would you do? My husband and I go with a bunch that do nothing rough. Every time we band just seems to forget me entirely, and is always with someone else, another lady of the bunch who is also married. For instance, if we all go to the show together he sits with her, and sits with her at the ice cream parlor, and walks with her, leaving me to come alone, or with some of the rest of them. It is noticeable and embarrasses me. I don't know whether he is in love with her or not, and it makes me very unhappy. Can I do anything?

MARJIE. —Your suspicions are probably entirely unfounded, and you are making yourself unhappy over nothing. Why not talk it over with him. He very likely has never thought of it, and does not realize that his actions meant anything of that kind to you.

Mrs. Conlee Home — Mrs. W. R. Conlee, who has been visiting in Portland for the past ten days, returned home yesterday afternoon.

Visited Here — Mr. and Mrs. Charles Morrison of Kansas arrived here yesterday and will visit with Mr. and Mrs. Claude Weaver for a few days.

Will Return Soon — Miss Lorine Conlee will return from Portland the latter part of this week, where she has been visiting for some time.

Returned Home — Howard Young, who has been visiting in Eugene for the past three weeks, has returned home.

Miss Ueland Left — Miss Cora Ueland, who has been spending the summer here visiting with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Ueland, has returned to Minneapolis, where she will teach in the University of Minnesota.

Returned to Riddle

Mrs. Ethel Blundell returned to her home in Riddle yesterday afternoon, after a visit of two weeks at the home of Mrs. L. Reizenstein.

DEATH CAR DRIVER IS OUT OF JAIL

SALEM, Sept. 13.—After serving six months in the Marion county jail Miss Ella Wolfe, of Salem, driver of an automobile which, on February 17, struck and fatally injured Mrs. Elizabeth Hubbard, 52, also of Salem, today was given her freedom.

Miss Wolfe was sentenced April 9, after a jury had found her guilty of reckless driving, by Circuit Judge Percy Kelly.

At the time of the accident, which occurred at the corner of Commercial and Chemeketa streets, Miss Wolfe was accompanied by Miss Theresa Zachary, 15-year-old Salem girl. Witnesses at the inquest said that Mrs. Hubbard, who was just stepping from a curb when struck, was knocked 25 or 30 feet by the machine.

In sentencing Miss Wolfe Judge Kelly declared there "have been too many cases of this kind," and added that it "really was a homicide case."
