THE MISFIT By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER XLII Systematically, Craig Harper set about finding Natalie. Beverly said she looked shabby. Perhaps she was not working, would be more willing to listen to him. He was really intrigued with Natalie, perhaps more so than he ever had been with a woman. Had she divorced Horace he probably would have tried to persuade her to marry him. But in her equivocal position that was impossible, and he had figured unnecessary. Craig was not different from many wealthy young men, in that he had an idea he could buy what he wanted. Natalie had rebuffed him, refused to listen, been affronted, but if things were going badly with her—she might be more accessible. Harper recalled her love of a good time, her confession that she felt smothered in her husband's home; her animation when with him at all times, save during that last minor ride home, when she had so angrily rebuffed him. He would find her again, and—perhaps she would be kinder. Craig went to the boarding house Natalie had made her home when he last saw her, but they could give him no information. He figured she would not have gone from the locality, and often lingered in the vicinity hoping to meet her. Yet it was chance, after all, that threw her in his way. Natalie was fond of wheeling the baby on sunny days, and often spent hours in the street with her. Thinking she one day went farther than usual, her thoughts on Horace, feeling sad and depressed. So absorbed was she that she did not observe Craig Harper as he stared in amazement at her and the young babe. He knew it for a young child because of the way it lay low in the carriage, and a long, low whistle escaped him as she went slowly by on the opposite side of the street. Craig had not been looking for Natalie; he had been looking after some property he owned in the neighborhood. He started toward her, then with a peculiar smile halted. "A baby!" he muttered. "I wonder who his father is?" Then, as she turned a corner and disappeared, he made an effort to follow, he went on. "No wonder she left Horace if— oh, it doesn't seem like her. She spurred me quick enough, but perhaps—can it be that it is Horace's, and she is keeping it from him? I'd like to know what happened to make her leave him." Craig said, then with a shrug went about his business. Natalie had looked shabby, as Beverly Rainerford said. When Craig had taken her for that long ride into the country she had taken special pains with her toilet, had worn the best she had. Her office dress had become worn, her whole appearance suggested poverty to one who had only known her as Horace Grandell's wife, exquisitely dressed and groomed. Craig Harper was a lover of beauty, and Natalie's unusual type had appealed strongly to him. But Craig had only seen that beauty amid luxurious surroundings, increased by exquisite care and dressing—save only the two or three times he had taken her motoring after she left Horace. And even then her plain suit had been well tailored, her accessories in perfect taste, and still fresh. This tired-looking girl-woman wheeling the baby had lost her attraction for Harper, at least for the present. Natalie had grave reason to look worried. Etta was now about, able to attend to her own household. Natalie knew Clyde could not afford a maid permanently; she had heard then that to have a woman one day a week to do the heavy cleaning, and Etta would do the rest. Even should she remain for a time longer without wages, Natalie felt it would be an imposition, that with the high cost of food Clyde could hardly make ends meet as it was. The thought of leaving her peaceful harbor made her almost ill. Simple as Etta's home was, it was filled with love and happiness some of which flowed over upon Natalie's troubled soul. "If Horace and I could have been alone, even poor like they are, we would have been happy," she said often, as she saw the perfect devotion and consideration Clyde and Etta had each for the other. "And I used to think that money, fine clothes and houses made people happy!" Yet at times she sighed longingly for some of the luxuries to which she had become accustomed as Horace's wife—her own private bath, her lovely sitting room, all her own; all the conveniences of her perfectly appointed apartment in her husband's house. But, most of all, Natalie longed for Horace; and as the days and weeks had passed, that longing had grown until it was a steady ache—a pain. (To Be Continued.)

HEADED SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION 44 YEARS (International News Service.) HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Sept. 18.—A record that is believed to be unequalled in the United States has just been made by J. B. Potts, of the Fifth Avenue Baptist church here, who has been relieved at his own urgent request of the presidency of the Guyandotte Baptist Sunday School association. He has been president continuously for 44 years, being selected each year. His resignation was presented at the annual convention recently held and H. E. Jackson, president of the Bank of Milton, was appointed as his successor.

MOVIES Liberty Theatre "Main Street" with all its flavor and rural charm, the peculiarities, humors, poignantness, high and low spots, genius in "Main Street," which opens today at the Liberty Theatre for a three days' run, with Florence Vidor and Monte Blue in the featured roles. "Main Street," in the novel form by Sinclair Lewis, was the most widely discussed book ever published in America, not excepting "Uncle Tom's Cabin;" it dealt with the life of the small town and aroused more comment pro and con than anything of its kind. It is a long time since the screen has seen anything like the ensemble of actors assembled in "Main Street"—a distinguished cast that gives life and dash to the action. Think of these players all being in one picture: Florence Vidor, Monte Blue, Harry Myers, Nod Beery, Louise Fazenda, Robert Gordon, Josephine Crowell, Gordon Griffith, Otis Harlan and Alan Hale. The story is familiar to many: Carol Kennicott, her revolt against what she finds in Gopher Prairie, a Main Street town, her attempts to make it fit with the ideas she has acquired from books and college, her fight. The picture should be seen by everyone, for Main Street is a little world, and the world is composed of nothing but Main Streets. Fraise is due the able direction by Harry Beaumont, and to Julien Josephson, who wrote the scenario. Antlers Theatre A party is in progress. Present are unshackled females with butterfly souls, debutantes in daring costumes, carmine chorus girls with greedy eyes, foolish flappers fluttering through flames and attended by aged cavaliers and sleek parlor pythons, dancing mule steaks and two-carat smug puppies—and gayest among them all is Swiftie Forbes (Gloria Swanson) the most vivid character in "Prodigal Daughters," a Sam Wood production, which will be on view at the Antlers Theatre tonight. "Prodigal Daughters" is a swift moving story of what happens when young women are permitted to carry latehicks, keep their own hours, drink, smoke, jazz and defy every convention revered by the old-fashioned type of women. For "Swiftie" Forbes in "Prodigal Daughters," it means the "end of the world," in a manner that will thrill the audience. Majestic Theatre Rodolph Valentino in "Blood and Sand" his first Paramount picture starring vehicle which will be the feature at the Majestic Theatre tonight, portrays a Spanish "ace," a bull-fighter who has risen to the same popularity in his profession as that enjoyed by "Babe" Ruth, Eddie Rickenbacker, Jimmie Murphy and Charles Paddock in theirs. As "Juan Gallardo," an idol of Spain, Mr. Valentino is called endangeringly by the bull-fighting crowds, "Espada," or "spade," that being the type of ace considered particularly lucky in Andalusia. DUTY OF PUBLIC TO SEE FILM By THOMAS NUNAN Nobody who sees "Human Wreckage," the Mrs. Wallace Reid picture on the Century screen, a film of power and great purpose, is likely to ever be tricked into the dope habit. On trickery, as the story clearly shows, the peddlers and higher-up dealers depend in making victims to whom they may sell the narcotics. So it is well that the tricks of this awful traffic are exposed, along with the showing of the suffering and abject misery that the habit inevitably entails. The danger, it seems can be averted only at the beginning of each individual case, which makes imperative the educational need in relation to the drugs and those who sell them. Mrs. Reid has been splendidly brave in giving this production to the world. Thinking about the cumulative good that it will do, the picture seems to be something to be classed among the greatest recent benefits to humanity. The wife of Wallace Reid showed great courage in dealing with the problem that was hers when her struggle to save the gifted actor first stirred the American public to interest and sympathy. We may be sure that it has not been a easy matter for her to give in picture form the vivid story of the pitiful experiences; her sense of duty and her zeal in this great

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN by MRS. ELLSBURY (Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.) Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—My little girl is going to high school this year for the first time. I want her to look nice and like the other girls, but don't know much about it. Can you help me any? ANXIOUS MOTHER. Anxious Mother:—As the high school has adopted a uniform dress for girls your problem is a comparatively simple one. With comfortable, neat shoes, a simple winter coat and hat, your daughter has all the wardrobe that is necessary. Dear Mrs. Ellsbury:—Like just about everyone who writes to you I have a problem to solve that seems too big for me. I have been going with a man for a long time, and I really love him, and would be happy to marry him and have a home. There is no reason why we could not marry except that he has never asked me. He talks sometimes about marriage in rather an abstract way, but never has directly asked me to marry him, although I really think he loves me. What shall I do? I do not want to give him up, neither do I want to go on this way. Still if he does not intend to marry me we should not be going together so long. I have been invited to go to California to spend the winter with some friends; shall I go?
