THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER XLVI

"Well, Crandell, so you've returned to the bosom of your family once more," Craig said, eyeing him sharply.

Horace made an evasive reply. "I saw Mrs. Crandell the other day. Not to talk with her, however. I thought she looked ill."

Horace stared at him. Natalie was in New York. He would find her. Horace started to speak, his training making him resent Harper's tone, his expression. Yet his anxiety to find Natalie was so great he would question him. But another member of the Club claimed his attention, and when he looked again, Harper was nowhere to be seen.

Horace felt a quick thrill of joy. Natalie was in New York. If Harper had seen her, he would find out where and when. The rest would be easy.

But as he left the Club his elation died. He recalled the expression on Harper's face, his tone as he spoke to him. His old resentment, the jealousy he had felt the night he quarreled so bitterly with Natalie came back. How did it happen that Craig Harper had seen her, known of her presence in New York—evidently the only person who had seen her? Had Natalie let him know her whereabouts while hiding from him, her husband? If so, she could have but one reason—she cared for Harper, and so was lost to him.

The thought was agony to the distraught man. He clenched his hands, he muttered:

"I'll not believe it until she tells me so herself." Yet he no longer thought of finding Harper, of questioning him. Natalie was in the city. He would find her if he had to search it street by street, house by house.

Harper had said she looked ill. He must find her, and unless she told him she no longer loved him, care for her. He went to the bank, found she had drawn none of the money deposited in her name. How had she lived? Had she been drugging in some office, Crandell? Craig sneered and turned away quickly before Horace could question him further.

"What is it? What's between them?" Horace said between clenched teeth. "I'll find her—or I'll drag it out of him."

Tomorrow—A Troubled Conscience

she had fled from them. No woman of any spirit would have remained.

He thought of Etta, but he had gone there several times before he went abroad and had learned nothing of Natalie. Naturally if she were hiding she would not communicate with them, so giving a clue to her whereabouts—and if she had been with—Harper—

Try as he would, his mind continually veered back to this. Harper had seen her, knew more of her than his surrealist question indicated. Harper was rich, fascinating to women because of his gay personality. Natalie had turned to him even while with them because of her loneliness. Could he blame her if she had gone to him in her distressing need of help, of companionship?

Days passed but he found no clue to his missing wife. He avoided the Club, felt he couldn't endure the sight of Harper. But finally he decided he would seek him, demand where Natalie was. She was still his wife. He had the right.

At the Club he found Harper. Said he:

"Harper, where did you see my wife?"

Craig, startled at the question, an abrupt, flushed, then replied:

"I saw her on 80th street. You know I have property in that vicinity."

"Are you sure it was Mrs. Crandell?"

"Positive. She was wheeling a young baby."

Horace visibly staggered back, shrank from the meaning look in Harper's face.

"What has happened between you and your wife, I don't know," Harper went on after a moment, "but I saw her looking shabby, ill, wheeling a very young babe."

"Is that the only time you have seen her?" Horace bent keen eyes upon him.

"For some time, yes. It seems to me you take mighty poor care of your family, Crandell." Craig sneered and turned away quickly before Horace could question him further.

"What is it? What's between them?" Horace said between clenched teeth. "I'll find her—or I'll drag it out of him."

MOVIES

Liberty Theatre
The outstanding feature of "Mind Over Motor," the Ward Laucelle screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's Saturday Evening Post story, starring Trisie Fritzsche, America's leading comedienne for many years, is a spectacular automobile race in which several jabs into the death-defying drivers results in serious injuries to a number of them. The race is excellently photographed and the progress of the drivers kept before the audience, for Director Laucelle had a corps of photographers stationed at all points of vantage along the course. It is without doubt the most thrilling automobile race ever conceived and produced on either screen or stage. "Mind Over Motor" is at the Liberty theatre tomorrow and Saturday.

Majestic Theatre
The faces of the members of the company of "The Valley of Silent Men," the new Cosmopolitan production for Paramount which will be shown at the Majestic theatre tonight, looked like fried steaks when they had maddened filming the picture in the Canadian Rockies. The glare of the sun on the snow, burns the face and eyes. The minute the camera stopped grinding, handkerchiefs were placed over their faces and dark eye glasses put on, to ward off the glare. Lights in picture studios are considered hard on the eyes, but the members of "The Valley of Silent Men" cast declare that the snow-covered mountains of Canada had nothing on the studios for hardships.

Anders Theatre
A fine cast appears in the new Edwin Caruso production, "Mighty Lak a Rose," released by First National and to be shown tonight at the Anders theatre.

In this cast are Dorothy Mackall, a pretty young English girl, who has been appearing lately in the Ziegfeld Follies; James Rennie, leading man in "Shore Leave"; Sam Hardy, who is supporting Lenore Glee in "Kiki"; Anders Randolph, Helene Montrose, Paul Panzer and Harry Short. Another fine actor who has a prominent part in the picture is "Sean Francis," a Scotch collier, an exceptionally intelligent dog.

"Mighty Lak a Rose" is a crook play. It shows the power of music not only in "swell" society but in the underworld, where desperate crooks plan desperate work. The story is a battle of a violin, in the hands of a beautiful and innocent girl, against wayward sods. My Caruso is said to have made a picture that is gripping in delineation of men and women who are gradually drawn from the wide and crooked path to the straight and narrow one. He has built up a smashing climax wherein some of these old, hardened crooks take on a social covering that allows them to enter society homes.

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients at a small cost, all ready for use. It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous.
