THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Natalie Horton, business girl, marries Horace Crandell, an aristocratic bachelor living with his mother. The latter opposes her son's marriage to Natalie and afterward ignores her. Horace neglects Natalie to give time to his mother.

Craig Harper and Beverly Rainford come into Natalie's life, influencing her. Mrs. Crandell doubts her word, then demands an apology. She calls her a "misfit." Horace also quarrels with her. Believing her husband's love for her lost, Natalie runs away. She takes a position in an office, is obliged to lose it, also another one. She becomes a maid in the home of one of her girl friends, Etta. Horace and his mother go to Europe. Horace grieves, returns and hears of Natalie through Harper. He searches until he finds her and pleads with her to return to him.

CHAPTER XLIX

For a space both Horace and Natalie fell silent. He had exhausted his entreaties; all he could do was to reiterate them. And Natalie, cold, aloof, sat with her eyes fixed on the floor, her hands working nervously in her lap.

"Natalie, is there anyone else?" Horace finally asked in desperation. "What do you mean—anyone else?" Even the question was apathetic, the mood of the morning still upon the girl.

"Have you given your love to another? Is that why you are so un-forgiving?" Natalie started, shocked. The blood rushed into her cheeks and lips and drained away leaving her deathlike. After a moment she said:

"There never was anybody but you."

In a moment she was in Horace's arms. He was kissing her, calling her all the endearing names that came to him, holding her close. She opened her lips to speak, but with tender kisses he closed them.

"Dearest," he said, "you have forgiven me. You do love me, tell me so."

"I love you, yes. That's what has made it so hard," Natalie said, drawing away. "Let me go, please. I am stupid. I can't think—"

"I don't want you to think, dear," Horace replied, releasing her. "I will think for you. I have been living for this hour, when I should find you, win your forgiveness, and take you home. Oh, my poor dear! I never can forgive myself."

The sound of a baby's wailing reached them.

"Please go now, Horace. I must help Etta."

"But you are going with me. Etta will have to get along without you."

"No, I am not going—back there."

"We'll travel a while first. You are ill, worn out. I'll—"

"I shall never go back."

"I—why, Natalie—I don't understand. You say you love me, that there is no one else. Do you think I shall let you go now that I have found you?"

"You must."

Horace looked at his wife in amazement. From the moment she had told him there was no one else, he had no slightest doubt that she would return to him. He had found her. She was his.

"There is no use talking any longer, Horace. There is only one way I should ever consent to come back to you—and that way is not possible—to you," Natalie spoke slowly as if weighing each word. Her heart was crying out for him, his kisses, his tender words had called forth all her longing for him, yet she would not surrender.

"There is nothing I will not do, Natalie, nothing."

"Will you take an apartment, a house, make me its mistress, live alone with me—as Clyde and Etta live, letting your mother live where she will? I thought not," as she watched his face. "I told you it was impossible for me to come back to you."

Horace's promise to his mother! He had sworn never to leave her, to live with her as long as she lived. She would not release him, that he knew. And now he also sensed the strength of Natalie's will. She had suffered cruelly, was poor, worn out with the struggle; yet she was determined to accept nothing from him—be nothing to him, unless he broke his promise.

"You make it very hard, Natalie."

"Harder than it has been made for me," she asked.

"Oh, my dear, my dear, what can I say?"

"Nothing, Horace. Go back to your mother, the woman who treated me as less than nothing, because she thought me not worth her notice. But please go now. I feel ill—I'm so tired."

"Natalie, will you make me a promise?" Horace asked, almost beside himself. "Will you stay here with Etta? Let me pay her for taking care of you until I can hear from mother. She must release me from my promise. I am sure she will when she understands."

A wild laugh broke from Natalie's lips.

"Go, try if you want to, but she will never release you; never give you back to a 'misfit.' I'll give you time to cable and get your answer, a week. In a week—now go!" the girl said fiercely.

Horace bent over her, kissed her, then sought Etta, and, pressing a roll of bills into her hand, told her Natalie had promised to remain with her for a week. At the end of the week he would come again.

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

MRS. ELLSBURY
(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am only sixteen but I am tall, and look old for my age. Could I wear my skirts to my ankles, or do they look too long for my age? Am I too young for a black coat and hat?

SWEET SIXTEEN: You do not wish to look too old my dear. Unless you have very expensive and beautiful clothes you will look a little ridiculous with your long black clothes. Do not try to be old too soon. Have your skirts several inches above your ankles, and do not buy a black coat and hat.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am a young business man and I go with two girls, one 17, and one 22. I want to get married, and have a home of my own but I am not sure which one of these girls I love. One is sweet and pretty and very domestic. The other girl is not so pretty but she is snappy and smart, and can sing, and dance and play the piano. Which girl should I marry?

WORRIED LOVER: You should not marry either one until you are sure which one you love. When you are in love, you will not have to stop and
