THE MISFIT

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER LXVI

Horace hesitated when he reached the lodge. Should he tell Natalie that he knew of what had occurred? He decided not, and after waiting a few moments to compose himself he went in. He found her sitting in the dark beside the window. With a cry of joy she flew to meet him as he called her name.

"Oh, I am so glad you've come! I never want you to leave me again, but take me with you wherever you go!" she exclaimed hysterically as she clung to him.

Horace quieted her with loving words, soothing her as he would a child. Then he told her of his trip, talked of the people he had met until she was herself again. He had seen Clyde Blackwell and had invited him with Etta and the baby, to spend a week at the lodge.

"I thought it would please you," he said to Natalie.

"I am delighted," she returned. "It will be nice to have them here, and such a treat for them, Etta especially. It was good of you Horace, to think of them," grateful as always when he went out of his way to please her.

The next day a porter from the hotel came over for some things Harper had left with them. He told them Harper had been suddenly called away. Natalie felt herself flush, but Horace seemed to think nothing of Harper's sudden departure—much to her relief.

Beverly Rainford came the following week, and during her visit Natalie almost forgot the unpleasant incident. She was sure Harper never would annoy her again, so dismissed him from her mind. She had considered, telling Horace, then, like him, feared to hurt needlessly, and concluded to keep it a secret.

Natalie and Beverly often talked of Mrs. Crandell. Natalie telling of her wish to love her, to be loved by her; her fears that this would never happen.

"I am not of her world. No, not even though I have learned how to appear so as not to embarrass her," she said as Beverly tried to object.

IN MEMORIAM

In memory of Mrs. E. D. Harvey, who passed away Oct. 15th, 1923. Dearest mother, she has left us, left us, forever more.

But we hope to meet our loved one on that bright and happy shore. On that happy and sad the hours lonely the hours and sad the hours. Since our dear one has gone; But Oh! A brighter home than ours In Heaven is now her own.

Elizabeth D. Harris was born in Huntsville, Alabama, April 27th, 1855. And passed from this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Pearce, October 15th, 1923.

She was the daughter of David Huston Harris and Nancy Stovall Harris. She was married to Aldon H. Coats in 1883 and crossed the plains in the same year, and settled on a donation claim seven miles east of Oakland where she lived for 55 years. Then came to Roseburg and made her home with her daughter, Mrs. W. A. Pearce.

After Mr. Coats' death she was married to Aaron Harvey, March 29, 1898, Umpqua, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in 1918. Mr. Harvey passed away Sept. 21st, 1919.

Mrs. Harvey was a member of the Christian church and for over 60 years was a devoted Christian. Owing to her deafness she did not attend church, but was a daily reader of the Bible. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons and five daughters, besides a host of friends. I cannot say, I will not say, That she is dead—she is just away. With a cheery smile and a wave of her hand. She has wandered into an unknown land.

And left us dreaming how very fair It need must be since she lingers there. And you, O you who the wildest yearn For the old-time steps and the glad return. Think of her faring on as dear In the love of there as the love of here.

Mild and gentle as she was brave, When the sweetest love of her life she gave to the simple things. Where the violets grew pure as the eyes were likened to. The touch of her hands have stayed. He reverently as her lips have prayed. When the little brown thrush that hoarsely chirped. Was dear to her as the mocking bird And she pitted as much as a man in pain.

A writhing honey bee with rain

I shall always be a misfit in a certain sense—to her. Yet I want her to come back.

"You think she will, don't you?" Beverly inquired.

"I can't tell. Her letter was very non-committal. I feel somehow that she wants to come, but is afraid."

"Afraid? Of what? I can't imagine Mrs. Crandell doing anything she wishes to do," Beverly's surprise was genuine.

"It may sound silly," Natalie went on, "but I feel that she is afraid I will be in her way, that I will not be content to let her manage as she always has; that Horace will be unhappy. It was for Horace not herself that she has remained away—so he could be happy. Of that I am positive. I never thought of it at first, but now I am sure that was her object. She loved him devotedly you know."

"Yes, I never knew so devoted a mother, even though it has been a selfish devotion at times. But he is less devoted than you are, Natalie? Isn't it for love of Horace you go to willing to live up your home, go to where you were so unhappy?"

"I would do anything to make him happy, Beverly, and he never will be really happy until his mother returns. He tries to make me think he is content, but the very fact that he has to try proves that I am right. He loves me, has proven it. But he also loves his mother. It is not right that in her old age they should be separated."

"As I have said before, you are very generous, Natalie." Then after a moment's silence Beverly asked: "Suppose she refuses to come?"

"She will not. My only hope is that after she comes I can efface myself without losing Horace."

Left alone after a bit Beverly murmured:

"Will Mrs. Crandell be as generous as Natalie? I'm afraid not—poor Natalie!"

L. A. DIVORCE RATE

People Who Wed Elsewhere Go to Metropolis for Separation, Charge.

(International News Service.) LOS ANGELES, Oct. 15.—Statistics just issued by the state census bureau bear out the recent federal report that there are approximately five marriages to every divorce in the Rocky mountain and Pacific coast states.

The situation in this city, however, is not so good, local officials admit, because of the number of divorces obtained here by couples wed elsewhere. The government figures showed that in 1916 there was one divorce to every 5.02 marriages. Last year—the calendar year for 1922—there were 4.99 marriages to each divorce.

Orange county boasts that their proportion is much better, being 24 to 1 in 1916 and 27 to 1 in 1922. However, local officials point out that Orange county is the Grana Green of Southern California and that the statistics include many young persons who elope to Santa Ana, the county seat of Orange county, and marry there and later obtain a divorce in Los Angeles.
