

TCK! TCK! WHAT A PITY!

Read the other day of a poor farmer who bought a cheap plow, after only using it one season threw it in the fence corner and bought another kind of plow. Poor fellow! He must have bought a better plow. Now if he had only bought one of our

'A WIFE'S STORY'

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER VIII

"Damn the publisher; and damn your meddling!" Paul shouted at me. "When will you learn to mind your own business? I'm the one to manage things, not you! I'll not be dictated to, and he flung out of the house."

It was two days before I saw him again. I was terribly depressed, terribly worried. I had done harm instead of good by trying to find ways to economize, suggesting them to him. Never would I interfere again.

I made this resolve and determined to stand by it, no matter what happened. I would do all I could—all he would allow me, to retrench, but never again would I speak of it to him. No, not even if we went to the poor house. He wanted to run things. I would let him.

I loved Paul, was proud of his appearance, his popularity. But I was beginning to lose my faith in him in his ability to earn, as well as in his literary efforts. Should his book not be finished; should the publisher refuse it if it were, what would he do to support us? Father was unable to help us, even were he so minded. Perhaps he would not if he could. He had strict ideas of a married man's obligations, his duty to his family.

Gradually I dropped out of the little circle of friends I had made. I gave up the afternoon teas, bridge. I could neither afford the little things cost me, nor could I entertain in return. Save when we were invited in the evening and Paul insisted upon going, I remained closely at home, scarcely ever using the car because of the cost of the oil and gasoline.

Evelyn Markham was both perplexed and hurt by my actions. She begged me to come to her gay little affairs, coaxed me to tell her my reasons for dropping her as she called it.

"Have I done something to offend you Ruby?" she asked. "Indeed you haven't," I told her. "But the baby takes so much of my time I can't go as much as I did." "That's no excuse at all. You have a good maid. You went out when the baby was even younger."

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY
(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am a young man of 20 years of age. I am in love with a pretty girl. She wants me to go to church with her, and I do not want to. What shall I do?

TROUBLED: If you are really in love with her, I think that you will go to church. Two people in love cannot get along unless each makes concessions to the other. There are things that she will have to do that you wish to do and you should be willing to do the same for her. Surely going to church against your wishes is a small matter when you know that it will please her and make her happy.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am eighteen years old, and have been violently in love with a man twenty five years old for over a year. He dances with me at dances, and I see him occasionally on the street and speak to him, but he has never asked to take me any place. It would be impossible to invite him to my home as he has never given me an opportunity to say anything about it. Would it be bold to suggest sometime that we go some place together?

DISHEARTENED: You should never do that. Forget about him for a time and devote your attention to your other friends. You are too young to be wasting your time thinking of him when he gives you no cause. Be just your natural self, and you will be much happier than if you endeavored to attract his attention in any way that was unadvisable.

MOVIES

Liberty Theatre

When Julien Josephson and Dennison Cliff wrote a story founded on facts gleaned from Police Headquarters records, they created a melodrama which is not only exciting but believable. The audience sit on the edge of their chairs, as the scenes of the "Midnight Patrol" at the Liberty Theatre Wednesday and Thursday, pass before them.

Credit for this is also due to the producer, Thos. H. Ince, and the director, Irvin V. Willat, who neglected nothing which would add to the interest and atmosphere of the picture.

Thurston Hall and Rosemary Theby make an ideal hero and heroine, and each member of the cast has a part which is admirably suited to his individual ability.

Majestic Theatre

The Majestic Theatre is scheduled to play "The Way of the Transgressor," one of the late releases of the Independent Pictures Corporation.

"The Way of the Transgressor" deals with the conspiracy of leaders of the underworld to railroad to prison a former member of their clan, who has reformed and vowed to devote his life to an exposure of the machinations of those in power in criminal life.
