'A WIFE'S STORY'

By JANE PHELPS

CHAPTER XXVI

By sewing constantly I was able to keep the two rooms and care for my two little girls. Occasionally I received a remittance from Paul, never more than $25 or $30, always with the information that his living cost more than I would believe. I told him it was also growing more expensive at home, explained that I was sewing. He replied that he was glad I had found something to occupy my time, that otherwise I might be lonely.

"Don't work too hard. I'll be home soon and then we'll really live."

I longed to help in war work, as Evelyn and others were doing, but it was impossible. Just to care for the children, earn the necessary money, was all I could do, all my health would allow. When I spoke of it to Evelyn she said:

"You are doing your bit, Ruby. God will give you just as much credit as if you knit sweaters or managed a canteen."

But I often wondered how many wives were situated as I was, wives who because of the absence of the family wage earner had to put aside even their patriotism to care for the family left behind?

I often wondered also if Paul would come home with more stability of character, a more generous view of his fellows, a different attitude toward life. In spite of my sufferings, for I did suffer, I still loved Paul. I longed to have him with me. I had long ago given up my friends, all but Evelyn Markham. I had sacrificed them on the altar of Paul's irresponsibility.

Often I thought of appealing to father for help, and as often dismissed the idea. I never would let him know to what straits I had been reduced. I had married Paul against his wishes, and I knew his ideas concerning a married man's supporting his family. Brother Tom was "over there" fighting. Sometimes I fancied it would be easier to bear if Paul were also fighting. His letters, short though they were, invariably carried the tone of gay times in his beloved Paris.

Assuredly, had Tom been at home, I should have at least asked his advice. As it was I felt I must stand alone, sink or swim as might be. I craved sympathy and help. I received neither.

I was very unhappy, hard as I tried to conceal it. How can a woman, separated from her husband, her friends, constantly fretted by poverty—and worse, by uncertainty, be happy?

When with the children, I forced myself to be cheerful. But when they were in school, or with their young companions, I often gave way to depression; sometimes I wept bitterly.

Occasionally, as the months and years passed, I received a larger check from Paul. Once he sent me $100. But I dared not halt in my efforts for a moment. His remittances were too uncertain, too long a time often passed between them.

I knew there was excitement all about me, that never had people been so aroused as they were in the midst of the great war; yet I lived as detached an existence as if all the world were at peace behind closed doors.

I had grown thin, old-looking. I was shabby, had made over clothes until there was no longer anything I could do with them. I went nowhere, unless it were to return work given me; then I went after dark when my shabbiness might perhaps be less noticeable. The children had to be kept looking nicely. Joan declared she would run away if she couldn't have things other girls had, look as well. She frightened me. I knew she was capable of making her threat good, so spent nothing on myself that I might give her more. I did not want her to be embarrassed before her young friends.

Joan was growing very like Paul. She loved the meekness of life, was inclined to be snobbish though, goodness knows, she had no reason. Like her father, she argued she had always had things, should continue to.

There was little of interest happened to me in those long years of war, little to retail. One day, one month, one year, was just like the preceding one—a constant struggle.

Then one day there came a bulky letter from Paul.

Antlers Theatre

"Sixty Cents an Hour and Drive It Yourself. First Class Cars for Hire." So reads the sign in front of Grogan's garage in the Paramount picture, "Sixty Cents an Hour," starring Walter Hiers, which comes to the Antlers Theatre tonight only. Autoists can imagine the comedy in a scene of anyone unfamiliar with a car taking his sweetie out for a spin. The ride is sure to end more or less disastrously, as it does in the case of Jimmy Kirk, played by Walter Hiers, in this comedy. Hiers awakes from a daze to find Mamie Smith, played by Jacqueline Logan, a Ford roadster and himself in a heap after crashing through the side of a barn and landing none too gently in a pile of hay.

This episode is but one of many uproariously funny incidents in this excellent comedy-drama. The supporting cast is exceptionally strong.

Liberty Theatre

"Modern Matrimony," which opens its engagement at the Liberty Theatre today and tomorrow is the latest Selznick comedy starring Owen Moore, who made a nation wide sensational hit in "Reported Missing." The latest Moore vehicle is an up-to-the-minute satire on the difficulties of getting established in house-keeping by the newlyweds of the present day, and Victor Heerman, the author and director, has injected so much humor that it is a veritable barrage of rapid-fire laughs. Mr. Heerman has started his picture where most stories end—with a wedding. The happy groom has no more than slipped the ring on the bride's finger than his troubles begin.

To all brides and grooms who have gone through the trying experiences of homebuilding, and to all prospective brides and grooms who have that experience in store for the future, this comedy of errors will hold exceptional charm and delight. Love colors all a rosy hue, 'tis said, and the pleasure in feathering the nest is one which is eagerly anticipated by all who are about to promise "for better or for worse." It will be well for them to profit by the ludicrous experiences of our hero, ably portrayed by Owen Moore, and his fascinating

Quart of Water Cleans Kidneys

Take a Little Salts If Your Back Hurts, or Bladder is Troubling You

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Eating too much rich food creates acids, which excite the kidneys. They become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood. Then we get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys, or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin drinking a quart of water each day, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, and in a few days your kidneys may act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush and stimulate the kidneys; also to help neutralize the acids in the system, so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby often avoiding serious kidney complications. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.
