100 KILLED WHEN LAKE DAM BREAKS

Lake Cleo. Eight million cubic feet of water thundered down the mountains upon three townships. A power house was completely destroyed and the surrounding country inundated.

In the report of the outcome of the case of W. B. Patterson against J. I. Springfield, and others, it was stated that judgment was rendered against the defendant, Wallace. The judgment was entered against J. I. Springfield, and Grace V. Creswell, for the sum of $108.50, according to the filing in the county clerk's office.

WORKINGS OF ALLEGED "BOOZE RING" AIRED

shack in the rear of his pool hall, at which time Connelly, Roberts, Burnett, Brown and himself were present. It was there decided, he said, to form a bootlegging ring, and Burnett and Brown were appointed to manufacture the booze, and he and Roberts were to make sales, while Connelly and Schulte were to arrest competitors and give the members of the ring protection.

Wroe testified that a second meeting was held at Robert's hall a few days later, and that at that time there was considerable wrangling over how much money was to be paid the officers. It was finally decided, he said, that the retailers would pay the manufacturers $15 for each gallon and that the manufacturers were to pay the officers $5 per gallon.

A third meeting was held, he told the court and it was stated that officers should get more money. Wroe said that Connelly said something about framing up on Napier and Zachary, and that he (Wroe) didn't want to be mixed up in any such affair so left the meeting.

"I told Roberts that whatever he did would be all right with me," Wroe said. "Burnett and Brown had about 20 gallons of booze on hand at the time the ring was started, and I got some liquor from Roberts and Burnett and sold it at the Rainbow."

When asked if Connelly and Schulte knew he was selling booze he answered that he supposed they did. "Everybody in Reedsport knew about it," he told the jury. "I run the place wide open and sold to anybody that had the money. I knew that I would get caught sooner or later and I was trying to make as much money as I could before I got hooked."

"I paid Roberts $200 the last of June," Wroe said when asked regarding payments for the booze. "Roberts came to me and said that these fellows want some more money. I understood that he meant the officers. I didn't want to pay it, but I had agreed to meet the terms Roberts made so I paid him the money."

The state asked Wroe if he had ever been approached by Connelly with an offer for the purchase of the pool hall. The question met with an objection from the defense, and a legal argument ensued, during which the jury was given a recess. The state's purpose, Attorney Wimberly said, was to prove that a conspiracy existed, and that Connelly had approached Wroe and had offered to buy him out, as they feared that he would not be close-mouthed in the liquor deal. The objection of the defense was sustained, but later the question was placed in another way, but upon motion of the defense was taken from the records.

George Miles was next called, but his testimony had little influence, except as it tended to show that Connelly, while an officer, had knowledge of booze being sold in Reedsport.

Following Miles' testimony, the state rested. The defense moved for a directed verdict, claiming that all evidence given by the state bearing out any of the allegations of the indictment, was given by accomplices and that such evidence was not sufficiently corroborated. The motion was overruled.

Connelly then took the stand in his own behalf. He claimed that he was never present at any of the meetings alleged by the state as having been held for the formation of a liquor ring, and branded such testimony as "absolutely false." He denied also that he had ever accepted any money for protecting bootleggers. He also recanted testimony given by Roberts in the recorder's court at Reedsport, in which Roberts under oath was quoted as saying that he had never paid money to Connelly or other officers for protection.

On July 2, when the bribe was alleged to have been paid, Connelly testified that he and Schulte were at Westlake.

"We went to Westlake to raid a still supposed to be owned by Roberts, Brown and Napier," Connelly said. "We were at Westlake all day on the 2nd and didn't get home until after midnight on the 3rd."

He testified that he remembered the date particularly, because it was the day a boat was wrecked on the bar and he was told about it upon reaching East Gardiner on the way home.

Connelly testified that he received a letter from Bill Burnett, while the latter was confined in the Multnomah county jail on a charge of moonshining. This letter was written by Roberts, and mailed to Burnett, the witness said. He had misplaced the letter, he claimed, and was unable to produce it.

"Everybody is sorry to see you put in jail," the letter is purported to have said. Connelly put you there and he is near got me. I am going to get even with him. I am going to see him for $1,250. You had better put in a bill with me, and my attorney, Mr. Napier, will collect it."

Connelly said that this letter was read by a number of persons at Reedsport and that it contained other remarks concerning himself. Burnett sent the letter to Connelly

SENATOR LODGE IS AGAIN LEADER

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, Dec. 1.—All members of the senate progressive bloc absented themselves today from the republican senate conference at which the party organization was speedily effected with the re-election of Senator Lodge as leader. The election of the president of the senate did not come before the conference, which adhered to the plan to proceed on the assumption that Senator Cummins retains the office as president pro tempore without a formal election.

by a friend, Leonard Connelly said, and asked that it be returned.

Under cross examination Connelly admitted that he had been convicted of the crime of selling a barrel of booze. He said that a friend had written him about the booze and that he had sold the liquor and had given all of the proceeds to his friend's wife while she was in hard circumstances and that he did not profit by the deal.

When asked who wrote him about the liquor, and whose it was, he refused to answer. The state's attorney appealed to the court to force an answer, and in spite of Connelly's determination not to divulge the name of the owner of the booze, he at last answered that it was Burnett's liquor and was sold while Burnett was in jail and the money given to Mrs. Burnett. The booze was found buried in a swamp, he claimed.

Connelly also admitted that he had bought booze from Roberts on several occasions, and that Roberts had offered him a bribe on three separate occasions. The bribe was not taken, he maintained.

Fred Schulte followed Connelly on the stand and gave testimony upholding Connelly's statement that they were at Westlake when the state alleges the bribe was turned over.

"We left Reedsport after dark on the night of the first of July," Schulte said, "and went up the railroad track. We met Burnett and then went to Ada station getting there about daybreak. I left Connelly and Burnett in camp and returned to Reedsport to take the evening meal with my relatives who were visiting from San Diego. On the afternoon of the 3rd I went back and met Connelly and we came back to Reedsport getting there about midnight."

Upon further examination, Schulte testified that he read a letter which had been written to Burnett by Roberts, while Burnett was in jail in Portland. He said the letter has been lost but when called upon to give the contents, he was able to testify. He said that Roberts wanted Burnett to make out a bill against Connelly for a sum of money alleged to be due. Roberts had already filed a civil suit to recover $1250 and in the letter requested Burnett to do the same. When cross examined Schulte said that that was the only part of the letter he had remembered.

Schulte testified that he was appointed constable in February, 1922, and held that position during May, June and July, during which time the ring was alleged to have been operating. He said that he did not arrest Brown or Burnett, during those months, but had caused their arrests prior to that time in March and April. By this cross examination, the prosecution attempted to show that Schulte did not molest them during May, June and July.

G. Collins, a salarier at Reedsport, was on the stand next and testified that he heard the investigation hearing at Reedsport at which time Roberts was questioned concerning the bribery of Connelly and Schulte. Collins testified that he was seated just behind Roberts at the hearing and distinctly heard him say that he had never paid a cent to Connelly and Schulte for protection purposes. Collins is a former marshal at Reedsport but at the present time holds no official position there. When cross examined by Attorney Cordon, he said that he could remember no other evidence introduced at the hearing in Reedsport, but was positive that Roberts had made the statement he testified to.

The noon recess was taken after this testimony was given.

Bill Burnett, one of the alleged "manufacturers" of the "booze ring's" product, was called to testify at the beginning of the afternoon session. Burnett testified that he served time in the Multnomah county jail from November, 1922, to February, 1923, for having liquor in his possession. He testified that he was with Connelly and Schulte on the night of July 1st and 2nd, 1922 when they were alleged to have been engaged in a search for a still in the Ada district. He said that he was residing on the B. O. Roberts ranch at Elbow creek and that he met the two officers there, by a pre-arrangement.

"We walked until about midnight on the night of July 1st and had breakfast the next morning near the S. P. railroad tracks," he said. He declared he accompanied the officers to show them where a still was located as he surmised that one was operating in that district. He said that Schulte accompanied them as far as a station named Booth, where he left them. He further testified that he was not connected with any liquor ring in Reedsport and had never attended the meetings which Roberts testified he participated in. He further stated that when he was incarcerated in the Portland jail that he received a letter from Roberts requesting him to file a bill against Connelly for a sum of money. He did not state what the sum was alleged to be in payment for. He said he gave the letter to James Leonard, a fellow prisoner from Reedsport, who was serving time for moonshining. This letter was not given to Leonard when Leonard was released from custody, but was handed to him on a subsequent visit when Leonard made a trip to the jail to talk with him. Burnett said that he instructed Leonard to keep the letter for him until he returned home.

James Leonard next testified to having received the letter and declared that Burnett instructed him to hand it to Jack Connelly for safe keeping. He recited the contents of the letter as had been done by previous witnesses, stating that he could not remember all of it as he was not interested.

Nick Brown, a timber cruiser, testified that he had talked with Connelly at West Lake on July 2nd. This testimony was introduced to refute the testimony given by Roberts that Connelly visited his place on the night of July 2nd to receive a sum of money. Brown also testified that he had paid a fine in the federal court for having a still in his possession at Reedsport. Some difficulty was experienced in bringing forth this admission. He said that he had been acquainted with Connelly for six years and had sold his interest in the hotel at Reedsport to him.

The defense rested their case at 3 o'clock this afternoon. J. A. Zachary testified that he heard Roberts state in the Reedsport court that he had not paid any money to Connelly or Schulte. W. F. Smith, of Reedsport, testified as a character witness and said that Roberts' general reputation for truth and veracity in Reedsport and Gardiner was bad. George Rendine, another character witness also testified that Roberts did not bear a good reputation there.

The state's rebuttal commenced shortly after 3 o'clock and it is expected that the arguments will be started tonight. The case may not go to the jury until Monday however, on account of the volume of evidence to be reviewed by the attorneys.

SAN FRANCISCO IS HIT BY BAD STORM

(By United Press.) SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 1.—The winter gales struck the San Francisco bay region during the night, causing much damage. The most serious was grounding of the steamer Robin Gray on the breakwater of the old yacht harbor, where the ship still hangs perilously this morning with a crew of 27 aboard. Later this morning tugs pulled the Robin Gray from the rocks and an examination showed that the damage was not heavy. The Pacific mail freighter Judith Little was damaged when driven ashore at Hunter's Point. The army tug Elagador stove a hole in her side when driven into a cement pier. A pile driver was blown adrift and crashed into the pier doing heavy damage. Barges are adrift and power, and telephone wires are down.
