ing, says a correspondent of the Leb-anon (Mo.) Enterprise. About two and one-half years ago I made a resolution to quit and did quit for twenty-five days, feeling no ill effects until about the end of that period, when all of a sudden I began to have sleepy spells and had to quit reading.

Many times I did not know when I went to bed, but when I went to sleep my wife would wake me up some time my wife would wake me up some time the next day. I finally got afraid to go up in the woods for fear I might go to sleep and the big snake would carry me to its den and swallow me. So I broke my resolution by taking another chew and the sleepy spell was along the ralls. Wolf Can any one explain why all this hap-d the danger. With a pened?

"First-Ald Auto Kit" Latest.

Automobilists used to be content with carrying-by way of extraordi-nary accessories-a fire extinguisher, a swing for the baby and a tow rope, but with the list of those injured in auto accidents growing daily, some are beginning to add another piece of equipment, and an enterprising manufacturer of hospital goods is capitaliz ing this new need. says the New York Sun and Globe. He has provided an "automobile first-aid kit," which consists of the articles necessary to render first aid to persons injured while working on an automobile or driving it.

Everybody in Streesbeck, Germany Plays Game and it is Taught in Schools.

Stroesbeck, Germany, a little peasant village of 1,500 souis, heasts that 17 contains not a man, woman or chaid or school age who does not play the an cient game of chess, suys a corre-spondent of the New York Tribune Even the small children have kings queens, knights and pawns as play-things. Stroesbeck's fondness of chess dates back to the Eleventh century, so the story goes, when Count Gunnelin of the Wendish tribe, held here as a prisoner of the bishop of Magdeburg made his own chess board and taught his prison guards to play. Chess is taught in the schools and the children carry their chess books and their chess boards like children in the United States carry grammars or arithmetics and slates. Pupils in the elementary classes in Stroesbeck must pass an examination in chess and to the winners of the contests the village authorities give prizes-chess boards and pleces.

Chess boards are painted on the houses, inside and out, the dining ta bles and the sitting room tables in nearly all homes are chess boards themselves, and even the decorations on the walls of the houses are draw ings or paintings of "some great game" locally, or unusual play of checkminte by some player of renown.

Though Stroesbeck has been playing chess all these centuries, none of its citizens has ever attracted more than local fame. But the names of the world chess masters are almost sacred here and the life of each is known to every child.

"Two Bits" Sought by Derelict Shone Yellow Under Bright Street Lights.

I once walked with Jack London through the tenderioin section of Los Angeles, where the fragments of men were huddled. As we stood on the corner an aged vagrant walked up to us as softly as wind blowing over a grave.

"Please, mister," he said to Jack, "kin I have the price of a flop?" London stood, his white shirt open at the throat, his black Windsor tie knotted low on his breast, a faint weary smile playing over his hand-some face. "Sure," he said, "here's two bits."

The vagrant's scrawny hand clutched at the coin, which shone yel-low under the light, "That isn't a guarter, misser, H's five bucks." "No, it but," answered Jack, con-fused; "take it and best it, or I'll
