STOOPING ATTITUDE

If an observer will take his position upon a city street and watch the crowd passing on the walk, he will be apt to note that many people, probably the majority, have a stooping attitude, their heads bowed down in deep thought. Some young women seem to thrust their heads forward as if to follow a prevailing fad.

The physical culturists tell us that man was made to stand erect, and that if people do not have this good posture, the organs of the body will be cramped and fail to perform their function. Human life is probably considerably shortened by the failure to develop a good erect carriage and posture.

The stooping position seems a development of industrial life and civilization. Man in a state of nature would not be likely to bend over. The eyes of the savage would be upon the trees of the forest in which he hunted rather than on the ground. But when the mechanical arts develop, men work at benches, and they get the stooping habit. As industry becomes more highly refined, men work and study at desks. While their minds broaden, their bodies become round shouldered and contract. A very high price of physical well being is often paid for mental advancement.

Yet by attention to physical development, these unfortunate tendencies can be overcome. A physical culture teacher in a recent address spoke of a class of girls, who on beginning gymnastics not one could pass a posture test. When the same girls became high school seniors, 25 out of 30 could pass the requirements.

The people who allow their daily cares and tasks to twist their bodies into a slouchy shape suffer from one of civilization's most harmful tendencies. If they want to live useful and happy lives, they will get good advice as to physical development and follow it.

Turkey meat is quoted at twenty cents a pound, the lowest price known in this neck of the woods for many years. Over production is given as the reason for present quotations—evidence that supply and demand still regulate market prices, all things to the contrary notwithstanding.

Turkey meat at twenty cents per pound won't taste half as good as that bought at forty cents a pound or so ago. Funny, but it is a fact, the more a fellow pays for a certain article of food the better it suits the palate.

The Germans claim that they are about to blow up in a revolution. This is much like the young man who was going to suicide if his best girl did not marry him.

The people who used to think that "How dry I am" should be the national anthem, are probably now in favor of "Yes, we have no bananas today."

Europe is stirred by quarrels between races, while disputes about who shall have the post offices raises more turmoil in this country.

It is not reported that people who buy Christmas and holiday stuff at this time of year ever regret it when it comes most to holiday time.

The best way in the world to help the farmer and fruit grower is to buy his products—and buy them right here in Roseburg.

It's pretty wet just now to be trying liquor cases, but the dampness is not intoxicating—even if you get "soaked."

It will soon be turkey time again in Douglas county. Christmas calls for a good supply.

They're trying to hang the "wet" emblem on Ford. This is bad for Henry.

THE VILLAGE RHYMESTER
by Bartley Crum

Dear Folks:

"You're pinched for speeding" said a cop to Bill, a friend of mine. "You ought to get a year or more instead of just a fine. You birds who think you own the earth, are getting worse and worse, for every time you drive a car, you're flirting with a hearse."

Said Bill, "I beg your pardon sir, I did not mean to speed. This car of mine is old in years, it's almost gone to seed. You say that I was speeding sir, of course you mean the car. If what you say is really so, it's value's up to par, for 'pon my word this rat-trap has never once before, been guilty of a burst of speed to make a copper sore." Well take your junk and move along, with grins the copper said, "But watch your step, or you will feel my wrath upon your head."

Said Bill to me, "It beats the Dutch, this car so slow and out, but yesterday to Andrew Long, for just a song was sold. And now it shows a bit of class, a sort of last good-bye. It's up to me to buy it back, at least I'm going to try."

The moral here's a simple one. The things we give away, have virtues that are never found until the parting day. Then other folks will find them out and make us see them too. So look for worth in what you have before you say you're through.

PRUNE PICKIN'S

GOOD EVENING FOLKS—

The ump, chieftains
Will hold a
Reg'lar pow wow
Tonight and
It's hoped that
Those wearin'
Tapes will Leave 'em home
For fear of Bein' scalped.

DUMBBELL DORA THINKS

An ice plant is an Arctic flower.

Have you purchased your Xmas neckties yet?

Several new cake-eaters were in the village today and we noticed several of 'em in eatin' sinkers and java this a. m.

Another good endurance test is to suffer a mosquito bite under circumstances that do not leave you free to scratch.

We have learned through experience to avoid passing on the gutter side of elderly men, who chew the weed.

NO JOKE

This problem makes my worries pile.
Explain it, I entreat:
Why, when a runner runs a mile,
He only moves two feet.

CABBAGE AND BROCCOLI

Training is everything. The peach was once a bitter almond; broccoli is nothing but cabbage with a college education.

Another good way to protect the sanctity of your home is to possess sufficient manhood to hold your wife's respect.

The only three things entirely empty are a vacuum, Europe's purse and the house when the wife is away.

An ex-husband is about the worst menace we know of to the peace and quietude of the average small town.

Faith is something you can't compel yourself to have.

The ignorant man may learn but there is no hope for the yao who knows it all.

The big things of life are never done by a fussy man. Polite is one of the earmarks of mental strength.

Irate Roseburg Father—"I called Jimmy four times, and as he would not get up I turned down the covers and gave him a sound spanking."

Wife—"That means we'll be hunting a new cook."
"How's that?"
"Jimmy stayed with the Jones' last night and the cook slept in his bed."

What this country needs is more girls with the courage to tell their lover what to do when the clock strikes ten.

The merchant who cannot smile is in the same class with the woman who cannot cook—people dodge 'em.

"Fall in!" a command that makes you feel the same as when it starts to rain at a ball game.

A date, a bench, and romance—that is all.

Two souls bound in a dreamy, silken thrall.

A breath of roses—moonlight dim and rare.

A girl's fair hand—a head of golden hair.

From these constituents—produce a dream.

Some whispered nothings 'neath the moon's pale gleam.

Then add an ancient and risatious urge.

And lo! two separate lives agree to merge.

The st. cleaning dept., sometimes jokingly called "white wings," were out with their shovels on the main stem today, the damp weather havin' made spadin' easy.

The new st. cluster lights will be lit up Sat. morn as will several of the prominent citizens.

If the county wouldn't provide so many suitcases in the courtroom there would be fewer spectators.

The Elks minstreli will "do their stuff" this month and it is hoped that eggs will reach a new high level on or about December 17 and 18.

Jupe Pluckis was up most of the night attending to the spigot and its a good thing the "ol' boy" isn't on a miler.

A friend is a fellow who cusses the same people you do."

When Parents Are Enemies.

(By Wickee Wamboldt.)

You would regard anyone as an enemy who would tear down your character and land you in the penitentiary. Yet many parents do this sort of thing for their children. They do it unwittingly with the mistaken idea that they are being kind and indulgent, but the result is just the same.

I knew of a bank president, a very close friend of our family. He had a son who was fundamentally a boy of good principles. It was the boast of the father that he never exercised any supervision over this boy whom he made cashier of his bank.

He had the boy's room constructed with an outside door so the young man could come and go as he liked without anyone in the family knowing it.

Most people should have more or less restraint. They need it. They require that help in keeping straight. This complete lack of restraint caused this banker's son to drift into undesirable company. He began to gamble. Finally one day there came a big crash. The bank failed, due to the embezzlements of the cashier, and the shock killed his father.

Just yesterday a case was brought to my attention of wealthy parents who feel that they are being kind in giving their son all the money he wants and indulging him to the limit. They lost their first-born and for that reason seem to feel that they are called upon to ruin their second.

This boy will go down to a popular club, gamble, lose several thousand dollars and go to Dad for it the next morning and get it. He is the most reckless driver in the city. He runs his car at a rate that makes people dread to see him coming. He has already killed one person in an inexcusable smash-up. But still his parents continue in their policy of no restriction and plenty of money. Undoubtedly the day for restriction is past in this case, as far as the parents are concerned.

There is one thing that parents should bear in mind when they do not discipline their children, and that is that the children are going to get it in one way or another anyhow. Because that is what they are here for. If the parents do not do it, the world will. And when the world does it, it will be without a velvet glove on the iron hand.

The parents who turn an undisciplined child loose in the world are the greatest enemies he will ever meet in this existence. It is for lack of just such discipline that many a man looks through the bars of a cell or dangles at the end of a rope.

The ladies of the M. E. church will serve a chicken dinner, Friday evening at 6:30. 50c a plate.
