Hats For Spring

By HELEN ROSS. (Written for the United Press.) NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—(United Press.)—Becoming things have a way of remaining in fashion long after the hour has struck for them to pass on.

Witness the choice. The little head fitting hats that smart women have been wearing since early fall are still the hats most in favor.

Small turbans, with dangling metal trimmings, and the tri-corn hat—things which inevitably followed the trend toward directoire frocks—are making a strong bid to transplant the cloche, however.

by MRS. ELLSBURY
(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)
Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: Is it wise for a young married woman whose husband is away a great deal to get a job and go to work, especially if there is nothing much else for her to do, and they need the money?
ISABELLA.
ISABELLA: If the husband does not object, there is no reason why she should not.
Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: Can a girl of 17 disobey her guardian by law or can he compel her to do what he wishes? Does he have the same authority over her that her parents would have if they were alive? Will it injure a girl of that age if she smokes cigarettes?
FAN.
FAN: A girl of 17 is not yet of age, and her guardian has the same authority over her that a parent would have. It injures any girl to smoke cigarettes. It is not a matter of age.
Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: At an afternoon party where the mother is being assisted by her daughter, should the daughter receive with her? The daughter is too young to be a joint hostess but is just assisting the mother to serve, and think like that. Can you give me a cute idea for place cards at a St. Valentine party?
X. Y. Z.
X. Y. Z.: Yes, the daughter may receive with the mother, and accompany the incoming guests to the room where they remove their hats and coats while her mother retains her post at the door. Make small heart shaped cookies and cover them with pink frosting, or any colored frosting that harmonizes with your table decorations. With a small paper funnel, and

STRIP OF LAND OPEN TO ENTRY

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—A strip of land extending across Oregon from Dalles City, on the Columbia river, to a point on Snake river, opposite Port Boise, Ida., was ordered thrown open to entry today by the interior department.

The land originally was a part of the public domain granted for the construction of a wagon road by the Dalles Military Road company as the Eastern Oregon Land company, 1867. It is now proposed to open the remaining tracts under the homestead and desert land laws that has not already been patented.

Secretary Work signed, in addition, a public opening to entry February 13, twelve public land units in Southern Idaho.

Water for these units will be available with the opening of the irrigation season. The units are subject to a construction charge of $150 per irrigable acre, which may be adjusted every five years, in addition to an annual operation and maintenance charge.

THE DALLES, Ore., Jan. 12.—Ex-service men will be given preference for 91 days until May 1, in filing upon the old land grant.

The Dalles military road company, which was thrown open to entry today under the homestead and desert land laws by the federal government, after May 2, the tracts will be open to the general public.

The strip comprises disconnected tracts three miles wide on each side of the trail running through Sherman, Wheeler, Grant and Malheur counties.

An exact check on the amount of land contained in the opening will be completed Monday by the federal land office at The Dalles.
