GOATS MAY HAVE DEADLY TAKOSIS

That the disease which has been affecting the goats in the county and causing heavy losses, may be Takosis, is the opinion arrived at by County Agent B. W. Cooney, and State Veterinarian W. H. Lytle, after a thorough investigation. In order to determine definitely the nature of the affliction, several animals are being sent to the Oregon Agricultural College where blood tests will be made and experiments on rabbits and guinea pigs carried on. Takosis is one of the most serious of contagious diseases afflicting goats. It appears only occasionally in different sections of the country, but takes heavy toll of the animals affected. No cure or control method is known. It appeared in this state about ten years ago in Marion, Yamhill and Columbia counties, and killed hundreds of head of goats. The state college will be asked to aid in the investigation and experiments.

This is a Studebaker year.

BEFORE BABIES WERE BORN

Mrs. Oswald Benefited by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Girardville, Pa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my last two babies came. It keeps me in perfect health and I am on my feet getting meals and doing all my housework until an hour before the baby is born. A friend told me to take it and I have used ten bottles since I heard about it. I recommend the Vegetable Compound whenever I can. Just yesterday a friend was telling me how miserable she felt, and I said, 'If you start taking Lydia E. Pinkham's you will feel fine.' Now she is taking it."—Mrs. P. J. OSWALD, Jr., 405 W. Ogden St., Girardville, Pa.

Mrs. Nicola Paluzzi Says

Mishawaka, Indiana.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness before my babies were born. I was weak and tired out all the time and it helped me. When I had inward inflammation the doctor treated me, but it did not help me, so I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and it helped me right away. I will always have your medicines."—Mrs. NICOLA PALUZZI, 415 E. Broadway, Mishawaka, Indiana.

YOUNG VANDERBILT GETS $18 PER WEEK

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

BOSTON, Jan. 19.—William H. Vanderbilt, son of the late Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and heir to a fortune estimated at $20,000,000 has taken a position as messenger in the offices of Lee Higginson and company, bankers and brokers. He receives the salary of a beginner, $18 a week and asserts that he desires to learn banking from the bottom up.

He sits on a long bench with other messengers, answers the calls and runs errands. Upon his departure from work he returns to his home on Louisberg Square, Beacon Hill, where he lives with his bride of last November, who was formerly Emily O'Neill Davis, and where he employs a butler and five servants.

During the evening he is prominent in the social affairs of Boston's younger set.

The Revelations of a Paid Companion

CHAPTER IV.

"Because of my friendship for his father, and the surety my savings will not be wasted."

The house, some securities, money in the bank, acreage, everything now belonged to Bond. I had suspected Aunt Agatha of being something of a miser, but when I learned of the considerable fortune she had left I was astonished.

"I'll give you a week to get out," Jim Bond said when all was over. "You're some surprised I take it. Miss Agatha was an old sweetheart of my father's, and has always promised to look out for me. Guess she thought I ought to have been her son." He leered at me. "If you want to stay and keep house for me, I ain't got no objections. I'm a bachelor and guess I can afford a housekeeper. The old girl was pretty sly. I never dreamed she had so much."

He reiterated his offer that I remain as housekeeper. He also repeated his disagreeable, knowing leer.

"I'll be gone in a week," I told him, fearing and hating him.

"Suit yourself. A rich bacheior, and I'm that now, won't have any trouble finding someone to live with him."

He offered me Aunt Agatha's clothes, but I hautily refused them. An old woman's dresses and other things were no good to me, and I felt I'd rather die than to accept anything from him.

When finally I found myself alone—the lawyer, Jim Bond, the curious neighbors all gone, I gave way to a feeling of such utter discouragement as took away what little reasoning power I possessed.

Once again death had robbed me of everything, left me alone in the world. I felt no grief for Aunt Agatha, as I had when my parents left me, but the loneliness was there, the fear of the world, the wonder as to what would become of me.

In a way I had grown hard in the years with Aunt Agatha. I had learned to hide my feelings, to show indifference; but I was in a way even more helpless than when I came to her, less able to think and plan for myself. I had no youthful enthusiasms, no friends, no hope. And no home.

Until I know I was left homeless I had though little of Aunt Agatha's often repeated promise that after her death the bungalow would be mine. Now I thought of that broken promise with bitterness. Had she kept her word, had I a home, in some way I could manage to get on. But homeless, knowing nothing of any work by which I might support myself, I gave up the struggle before it commenced. I made no plans—I just drifted until the week was up.

I tried to think kindly of Aunt Agatha. She was dead, and she had given me a home when I needed one, had never abused me—save by words—had fed and clothed me. But I could not forget the cuel things she had said, the way she had denied me young companions, the hard work she had required of me, dangling the house before me as a reward.

Sentiment and Aunt Agatha seemed so incongruous that I smiled bitterly when I thought of what Jim Bond had told me. That she should so cherish an old love for a man who had married another that she would leave her only relative in abject poverty to enrich his son, was beyond my understanding—knowing Aunt Agatha.

During the week Jim Bond allowed me to get out, I cleaned the house thoroughly, working so steadily and so hard I had no time to think; and when finished I was so exhausted I went at once to sleep. There was little food in the house, and I had about three dollars in my purse—change that I had not given Aunt Agatha because of her sudden turn for the worse, and the excitement; this I had said nothing about, forgetting I had it until Jim Bond had gone. Then I decided I had a right to keep it. I had to live, to eat, while I was making his house clean against my departure—and his coming.

So it was that on the night before the day in which I was to be homeless I had $1.65 in my purse with which to pay to hear the music that brought me a certain peace and the thought of freedom.

Freedom—what should I do with it? My glance fell upon the newspaper I had picked up at the Bowl, the page of advertisements.

GREB RETAINS HIS TITLE IN BATTLE

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

Wilson, the former middleweight titleholder lost the crown to Greb last summer at the polo grounds and he was essaying to recapture it. GUN CLUB WILL GIVE VALENTINE BALL

The Roseburg Rod and Gun Club held a well attended meeting last night at Broadway's garage. A great deal of business was transacted, and it was unanimously decided to continue the proposition of holding an annual ball, and the second occasion of this nature will occur on St. Valentine's Day, February 14.

The next meeting of the club will take place on February 8, at which time the officers are to be elected. The meeting will be held at the Palace of Sweets, and a banquet will be given in connection.

It was decided that the club should install and maintain a booth at the Outdoor Life Exposition to be held at Portland on February 18 to 24.

The next club shoot will be held on February 3, at which time prizes of hams and bacons will be offered. Invitations are being sent out to other clubs of the state and to trapshooters in the county. It is the plan of the club to hold a merchandise shoot the first Sunday of every month during the spring and summer.

BLISTER RUST CAUSES HEAVY TIMBER LOSSES

Forests worth 27 million dollars, in Oregon, are in danger of destruction by the white pine blister rust, which has reached the northern boundary of the state. Three forms of plant life are subject to the disease—the gooseberry, the black currant, and the white and sugar pines.

The disease never passes from one pine to another but from the tree to currant or gooseberry and then back to the pine. This is tthe reason the U. S. department of Agriculture is making an effort to effect the extermination of the currant in Oregon. The black currant production is of little value to the state in comparison with the value of its pine forests and drastic action has been started.

A state law prohibits raising or selling black currants. The county horticulturists are helping enforce the law in their respective counties by sending letters to the owners of currants, explaining the situation and asking them to destroy their currant bushes.
