REPRIEVE JIM BOND'S OFFER SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

Rita Hall, at 16, loses both mother and father in an automobile accident. She is left penniless and goes to live with her father's step-sister in Los Angeles. Aunt Agatha is a hard, miserly woman who gives Rita a home, but denies her any youthful pleasures; she compels the girl to work and wait upon her; but promises to leave her her little home when she dies. Instead she wills all she has to a common fellow, Jim Bond, the son of an early sweetheart.

Rita, at the Hollywood Bowl, chances to pick up a newspaper and answers an advertisement therein. She is engaged by a Mrs. Ellwood as companion to travel to East with her. A nephew, Barton Ellwood, affects Rita unpleasantly. Just as she is about to start for Mrs. Ellwood's hotel, Jim Bond shuffles in. He proposes marriage if Rita will stay with him.

Chapter VII.
I stared at Jim Bond in disgust. His ferret eyes blinked at me with an appraising look that made me shudder. Live with him—marry him—

"I'd rather die than marry you Jim Bond!" I declared. "I'd die before I'd stay in the house with you. I hate you."

"I sorter thought you would," he said with an evil smile. "Agatha appreciated me more'n she did you. It's only natural that you should be mad at me because of that."

"It isn't because of that. It's because of you! I never thought about Aunt Agatha's money—"

"Guess you didn't know she had any," he interrupted. "Ain't mad about the house either I suppose." Again he smiled evilly.

"No, not now. I hate the old house, always have. But it was home, the only home I knew; and she had promised it to me. I felt a lump rise in my throat. I hated myself for talking to Jim Bond, but the words seemed to force themselves from me. "She knew I had earned it, and more too. But I am glad she left it to you, you or anyone but me; glad! I've found friends, am going away with them. If Aunt Agatha had kept her word I never should have found them, perhaps never left this miserable house."

Bon stared at me in amazement, fumbling for speech.

"Who you goin' with?" he finally asked.

regular prices.

Mr. Kyne's literary star is in the ascendant. His name is on the title pages of many books and is attached to innumerable stories in "The Saturday Evening Post" and "The Cosmopolitan" magazine, which have attracted a vast public in his writings. Success and fame have come to this young writer and his work certainly justifies it, for it is careful, finished and innately American. Kyne is good at plots and characterization and in "A Motion to Adjourn" he always evinces the possession of a dry and subtle humor which as very much to the taste of his readers.

Majestic Theatre

"How does the boy do it?" you hear in awe and admiring tones from those who have watched the progress of Harold Lloyd during the last three years, each picture setting a higher standard than the last, until it seems that surely he has reached the zenith of comedy production. But then comes his next Pathe comedy, and it is not only funnier, but is different in type.

Now we have "Why Worry" to not only laugh at, but to shake our heads at and marvel over. It is Lloyd's first serious attempt at straight farce. Here are real characters and entirely probable situations exaggerated to a state of absurdity that yet remain within the realm of possibility. "Why Worry" is a riot of fun, and the only thing for you to worry about is getting into the Majestic theatre during Wednesday and Thursday.

asked.

"A very rich woman, Mrs. Ellwood; she has been living at the Ambassador Hotel." I couldn't help bragging a little. "I am to go East with her as her companion, live with her."

He'd never know if I failed to suit Mrs. Ellwood. I'd never return. A curious exhilaration held my nerves taut and confident. There was nothing to fear, nothing at all that troubled me in the outlook ahead. I would keep my wits about me, learn through observation.

Jim Bond's eyes surveyed me with angry insolence.

"You'll be glad enough to come back to me one of these days. You ain't never earned your living, don't know what you're up against. I'll just put down that Mrs. Ellwood's name, case I wanted to write you." He leered at me. "Being companion to a cranky rich woman won't be as easy my girl, as being Jim Bond's wife. You'll be coming back to me one of these days, come begging."

"Let me pass," I said trembling with indignation. He had remained standing, directly between me and the door. "I don't know but I ought to examine your bag. Where's your trunk?" Suspicion in his ugly voice.

"Gone, and so am I," I darted past him and ran out of door, from the house, followed by a loud raucous laugh.

The encounter had upset me more than I realized. I was weak, trembling. I walked several blocks before I took the car. I couldn't present myself to Mrs. Ellwood in my condition.

Gradually I calmed down. Jim Bond was nothing to me, never had been, never could be. What a goose I was to let anything he said annoy me, frighten me.

What a nerve he had! How dared he even think I would stoop to marry him, let alone ask me to. Perhaps that was why Aunt Agatha had broken her promise, had left him the house. She thought I would marry him, the common loat.

The idea had not occurred to me, but his surprise, his anger that I was going away, his threats, all confirmed it. He and Aunt Agatha thought they had me helpless, that I would have to stay with him.

I had fooled them both.

I sent word to Mrs. Ellwood that I had arrived. I was to come up at once.

SERVICES AT M. E. CHURCH

Using as his text "A Wall From the Dark," Rev. Joseph Knott delivered another of his interesting sermons Tuesday evening at the revival meetings now in progress at the M. E. Church. The sermon was based on the words "And behold, two blind men, sitting by the wayside, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying: 'Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou son of David.'"

"And Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes, and immediately their eyes received sight and they followed him."

Good attendance is being maintained and interest is increasing in the meetings. Rev. Knott is a forceful speaker, combining originality in viewpoint with constant sincerity and at all times holding the interest of his audience. His humorous touches are rare but probably enjoyed the more for the reason of striking contrast with his vivid portrayal of immortal truths. The song service is excellent. Services will continue throughout the week.

SUPERINTENDENT HERE

T. H. Hill, superintendent of the Rock Creek trout hatchery, was in Roseburg today accompanied by his son Harry Hill. He states that during the high water, the creek washed a number of big boulders in below the hatchery dam and formed an obstruction which raised the water below the dam so that the fish had no trouble in getting over and the dam is not serving to stop the fish on their course up stream. He is procuring materials to construct an apron to hold back the fish until low water when the obstruction can be removed. To blow it out now, would create a current which would probably crawl out the dam.
