Neighborhood Circle Meets on Thursday

Mrs. Ethel Brown was hostess on Thursday afternoon, January 24th to the members of the Camas Valley Neighborhood Circle. Mrs. Winifred Brown assisted her during the afternoon. An interesting feature of the business meeting were the talks on current events by various members of the circle. The ladies who gathered at the Brown home were Mrs. Helen Mayer, Mrs. Lucy Dick, Miss Alice Scranton, Mrs. Louise Richter, Mrs. Annie Wood, Mrs. Scranton, Mrs. Clara Gouthier, Mrs. Doris Holott, Mrs. Audrey Smith, Mrs. Bertha Parrott, Mrs. Anna Martindale, Mrs. Ruth Lawson, Mrs. Winnie Brown and Mrs. Jennie Brown.

Junior Class Play Is Anticipated Event

School circles are awaiting with interest the presentation of the Junior Class Play, which will be an event of Tuesday, Feb. 5, at the Antlers theatre. The class has this year selected "Come Out of the Kitchen," the well known stage play by E. A. Thomas, first presented in New York with Ruth Chatterton in the leading role. Miss Ross and Miss Christensen of the faculty, are coaching the production. The cast includes the following names: Elva Westcott, Helen Faibe, Bertha Kohlhaugen, Dorothy Cordon, Vesta Beckley, Claire Taylor, Kenneth Clark, Denzel Pierce, Paul Godden, Hall Seely, Ray Burt. The committee which will have charge of the staging of the play are: properties, Fred Bellows and Kenneth Chilton; advertising, Bernard Young, Lotus Kelly, and Cyril Nichols; business manager, Lynn Beckley.

Marion Lawrence, a former popular Roseburg girl, has been a guest this week of Miss Iona Reibel. During her stay here she was the inspiration for several informal social affairs. Miss Lawrence and Miss Reibel are now visiting in Salem.

Saturday Musicals Will Start Tonight

Musical lovers are anticipating with interest the first of the Saturday evening Musicals at the Heinke Conservatory tonight. A series of these Musicals will be given, at which the students of the various departments of the conservatory will be presented. They are free to the public, and cards of admission may be secured by calling at the conservatory. The programs will be varied, including numbers by both the advanced students and the smaller pupils, orchestra selections, vocal solos, and dramatic readings. New classes in decorative art are also being started at the conservatory, and Mrs. Rusho, head of the art department, has interesting new departures for her students this year. She has just returned from Portland with samples of decorative art work which are unusually beautiful, and will be done by her classes here.

Elks Enjoy Leap Year Party

Reversing the usual order of things is always an interesting pastime, and the Elks and their ladies who gathered at the Leap Year party on Thursday evening made merry with the unusual diversion. The ladies of the lodge managed the dance, and asked the gentlemen to dance, and to supper. The hall was daintily decorated for the event, which was informal.

Freshmen Entertain for New Students

Between the hours of four and five on Friday afternoon, the old Freshman class at the high school entertained the new members just entering with an informal reception in the reception rooms. In the receiving line were the officers of the class, Eston Lough, Pauline Bubar, Dorothy Geddes, James Conn, Charles Doerner, Edith Starrett, Daphne Hughes, and the class advisor, Mrs. Milton Church. Class songs, and yells were taught the new students, and games tending to acquaint the various members of the class with each other were played. Miss Frances Butler, assisted by a number of the freshmen girls, served punch and wafers.

Beautifying City Theme of Meeting

An interesting meeting of the Roseburg Woman's club will be an event of Tuesday, at the home of Mrs. D. H. Morgan, at 923 Military street. The theme of the afternoon will be city betterment especially along the lines of cleaning and beautifying the city. Mrs. Foster Butler will speak on "Our City's Debts," and Mrs. D. E. Carr on "Cleaning Our City of Billboards." Mrs. C. H. Bailey will give an appropriate poem, and Miss Josephine Farrell will read a paper on Child Welfare, prepared for a previous meeting. Members will be required to answer roll call with a current event. The following very apt little verse is reprinted from the Woman's Club year book: "Why don't they keep the streets a little cleaner? You ask with deep annoyance not undue. Why don't they keep the parks a little greener? Did you ever stop to think That 'them' mean 'you'?"

Roseburg Couple Married at Los Angeles

Announcements of the marriage at Los Angeles on January fifth of Miss Peggy Ferris and Ronald King, both former Roseburg residents, have reached friends here. Miss Ferris was employed as a nurse at the Sold Bros Home hospital for a number of years, and went to Los Angeles about two months ago. Mr. King is an ex-service man and made his home at Rhodie before coming to Roseburg where he was employed as a janitor at the Soldiers Home. He left Roseburg last June for Los Angeles where he is with the Standard Oil company. They will make their home in Los Angeles.

Other members present Friday evening were Miss Lucretia Smith, Miss Florence Potter, Miss Katherine Merrill, Miss Verma Kohlhaugen, Miss Beulah Jarvis, Miss Carmen Robinson, Miss Winnifred Bates, Miss Verma Kohlhaugen and Miss Marjorie Brown will entertain the club on the fifteenth of February.

THEATRES

Liberty Theatre.

Rupert Hughes has written and directed an unusual film play in "Reno," which was produced at the Goldwyn studios and which opens at the Liberty theatre for a run of three days, starting tomorrow. The characters in "Reno" are vividly and realistically portrayed by such screen folk as Helene Chadwick, Lew Cody, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Hedda Hopper, Dale Fuller, Kathleen Key and Rush Hughes. The photography is beautiful and many brilliant lighting effects were secured by John Mesall. The theme of the story is skillfully built about the confusing divorce situation existing in the United States.

Antlers Theatre.

Tod Browning wrote the story of "White Tiger," at the Antlers originally for Miss Dean's use, and incorporated in it those elements in which she finds the best material for starring triumph, elements similar to those in the sensational underworld picture, "Outside the Law," a former Dean Browning success. But more than that, Browning wrote in "White Tiger" a humorous analysis of the so-called romantic interest of a criminal life. Matt Moore plays the leading role opposite Miss Dean, while Wallace Beery and Raymond Griffith handle the roles of two internationally famous crooks, associated with the underworld queen, "White Tiger," whom Miss Dean impersonates. The trio of criminals illustrate by their actions the fact that crooks never agree with one another if there is a chance of arguing, and haven't the slightest vestige of a "comradely" spirit.

I ALLOW GUY TO THINK I HAVE A LOVER

Chapter XVI
Mrs. Ellwood had had a bad night. I had scarcely slept at all, and when her husband came in to bid her good-morning, she told him.

"You go to bed, Rita. I'll stay with Mrs. Ellwood a while this morning." He laid his hand on my shoulder, patting me. "You've been through a good deal for so young a girl, and we mustn't let you overdo."

So Mrs. Ellwood had told him my poor, miserable, little story. I didn't know whether to be glad or sorry. He gave me a gentle push toward the door.

"Run along now. I'll have Anna call you when I am ready to leave." My eyes filled as I obeyed. They were so kind to me. I pulled the shade down, drew up a blanket over me and soon was sound asleep. It was 12 o'clock when Anna awakened me, refreshed, but I had imposed upon Mr. Ellwood's good nature in sleeping so long.

He reassured me then left at once, an anxious look on his face as he left the room. I realized he sensed Mrs. Ellwood was steadily filling, and my heart went out to him in pity. Even Guy had not seemed to understand; and Mollie had no slightest idea her mother was so ill as she was because Mrs. Ellwood invariably was her brightest when with her, even though the effort tired her.

Both Guy and Mollie knew their mother's life was bleak, but the loss of sight had come so gradually they had become accustomed to the idea in a way. They were sympathetic, yes. But it brought no shock to them as I knew it had to the husband.

I found myself watching him with something very like admiration. If Mrs. Ellwood was brave before her children, he was courageous with her, never showing his distress in any way, trying always to act as if she were not an invalid, nearly blind, but as she always had been, his loved wife, and companion.

With increasing weakness, Mrs. Ellwood developed a great restlessness. I learn to choose the sections of the daily paper she enjoyed and read to her from magazines and books until her restlessness passed away and she would sleep, often not until almost morning.

I was tired, but Guy's remarks concerning my looks annoyed me. He constantly urged me to go out with him, to ride, or to go some place of amusement. I never dreamed a situation could be so difficult, so perplexing.

"They're working you to death," he grumbled. "I shall tell mother so if you don't come with me. She no one has the right to make you look so pale, so tired. She would be the first to insist you take care of yourself."

"Oh, you mustn't speak to her, you mustn't. I won't let you," I declared. "I shouldn't go with you even if she advised it."

"I begin to understand," his voice was ugly. "There's someone else. It's me you object to." His hang dog manner amused me, yet I thought it better to let him think there was someone else. Perhaps he would let me alone.

"Tell me, is there?" "Would it be so strange if there were?" I parried.

"I might have known it. No girl as lovely as you could escape having a sweetheart."

I turned away with a light laugh, but with a queer sort of a sob in my heart. The only man who had ever pretended to care for me had been that awful Jim Bond, and he only because he thought I would be useful to him as a housekeeper. It wasn't flattering to my self-esteem.

But I had determined to accept no attentions from the son of the house where I was but little more than a menial, and it mattered nothing what he thought so that I could keep him away from me. I liked Guy, but never could love him. And, like most young girls, I wanted to love the young man I allowed to make love to me. Mr. Feulings for Guy was that of a big sister. I wanted to be kind, but in a sisterly way, and although I knew so little of men, I instinctively knew he would not long let me remain on a sisterly basis if I gave in to him.

WOODROW WILSON'S LIFE EBBING AWAY

(Associated Press Licensed Wire) WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Woodrow Wilson continues to grow weaker hour by hour but there is no indication this afternoon that the end might come.

At 3 p. m. Dr. Grayson said sick man's condition had shown material change except for the slow but certain advance toward complete exhaustion.

(Associated Press Licensed Wire) WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Woodrow Wilson's illness in his bed in the house today.

"In this silence with no breath," he said, "we pray for great, distinguished one, as lingers in the shadows of morning. In that hushed chamber comfort and peace, give rest to all and keep him in his place and may the shadow of most high bath him in its light. Her house—in heaven more—through Jesus Christ Lord—Amen."

McAdoo's trip to the nationalitol is being made with the purpose. He is plotting the opening of the railway locomotives against the wings of death hovering over the home of Woodrow Wilson.

McAdoo's father, in the hope that he will reach the bedside of the ex-president while he is yet on a journey, McAdoo is determined to wade into the gusher of uncapable yesterday before the late oil lease investigators by Dohny and demand the right to heard in defense of his rights citizen, lawyer in active presidential nomination.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—Woodrow Wilson, who was president of the United States, declared by Germany, offered just before he was stricken with his present ailment in Germany's starting his aid, according to James W. who was Mr. Wilson's ambassador in Berlin.

"Today I received a letter from Mr. Gerard, former Woodrow Wilson's secretary stating that he would become a member of the committee to raise funds for the doctors, artists and other ailments of Germany, which is ailing."

"It is characteristic of the son in the midst of his own distress should make this help the starving and the with hate."

HIGH SCHOOL WINS IN TWO DEBATS

The Roseburg high school debating team scored a double win last night, winning a unanimous decision in the contest held here at Myrtle Creek high school and a similar vote in the debate with Robert Starret in that city. Hall Starret composed the Roseburg team which here and put up some fine arguments on the state income tax. Harvey Rorer and Paul Jones made the trip to Grants Pass and reported the affirmative side of the same question. These two were the first of the inter-city series and count in the record for the local school. The debaters are showing some signs of coming out among the leading forensics in this section of the state.
