JOURNALISTIC SERVICE.

Back of all the questions of policy with which the newspaper man must deal, there rests the question of the financial basis of the enterprise. It is the ironical side of his task, that though his career is supposed to be dedicated to the public service, the newspaper man must so conduct his paper that it will be a sound business proposition and will pay. To some newspaper men that means that will lower their ideals, and temporize or hesitate in dealing with problems of civic and political righteousness. While some newspapers may fail as a result of a too outspoken expression of ill matured convictions, yet in the long run a newspaper succeeds best if it takes a strong stand for what is just and right. A newspaper does not necessarily have to call political opponents by hard names, and it can reasonably admit that people who think differently are honest as well as itself. But if it fails to show a deep earnestness for honest government and moral standards, it is difficult to command the respect of the community and build up substantial support. The community also has something to thing about in its relation to the business side of a newspaper. A public journal is the exponent of its home town. If it is not heartily supported on the financial side, and if the people do not assist it in its efforts to collect the news and report events accurately, the newspaper gives an unfavorable impression of the community. A strong and prosperous newspaper is one of the best assets that a city can have. It is a force that promotes civic sentiment, and which works in every issue to attract the attention of the public to all good causes, and rally the energy of the community to push the same.

Much attention has been excited by the recent convention of the student volunteer movement, at which hopes were expressed for new movements of young people for civic and social reforms. The question is arising in the minds of many young people, as to what practical things they can do in their own home towns to help on the cause of a better country. It is doubtful if as a rule it is best for young folks to start new organizations. There are almost too many societies now. A good way for idealistic young people to go to work, is to volunteer their services in the best community organizations in their home town. Young people who teach in Sunday schools, for instance, and who convey to children the high principles they are learning in schools and colleges, are doing their part to make the New Youth movement a vital thing. The hope and magnetism of youth is a tremendously stimulating force, and all kinds of community organizations are anxiously looking for young blood and the vigor of youthful energy.

So far the sportsmen have not induced the government to let them deduct from their income the value of the fish that got away.

There is talk in California of a law taxing bachelors over 28 years old. It seems hardly likely that the women will oppose it.

Many people seem to be troubled with defective memory when they come to listing their income for the tax return.

The young people are urged to be more punctual, and anyway they usually turn up promptly at mealtimes.

The income tax statute is a highly popular law among those who don't have to pay any.

Dear Folks:
It's funny that a man and wife can get along together, can work with perfect harmony in any kind of weather, can love each other all the while through life they are advancing, and yet they're always out of step the moment they start dancing.

They'll walk upon each others' toes and each will blame the other, although of course their inner thoughts, they'll do their best to smother. They both will smile to hide the fact that inwardly they're fretting, they'll try to make the others think a lot of fun they're getting.

It's strange a man will give his wife a deep and strong devotion. It's strange that he will do his best to shield her from emotion. It's strange that he will dress her up to keep her looking stunning, and yet he'll balk at teaching her to drive the car he's running. For let him try and well he knows a quarrel will be started, a quarrel that will leave behind a wife who's broken hearted. He knows his patience will not last through hours of beseeching she keep her eyes upon the road and stop her foolish screeching.

The answer's not a simple one, it keeps us all a guessing, although the truth of what I've said, right now you're all confessing. It must be one of Nature's pranks that's given us to tease us. But think of all that Nature gives to comfort and to please us.
