THE CREEK PEOPLE REVIVAL SERVICE

Through gathered last night at the Christian church to enjoy the service. Myrtle Creek sent a delegation, and all listened with interest to the message of "Change of Heart." Mr. Stivers, in a timely way showed what the suitable way was, putting the scripture in his statements. Then he stepped by step how the heart changed, giving many illuminations.

The orchestra opened with "The Old Church." The male quartette gave an excellent number, and the soloists gladly expressing a great deal in prayer. For two weeks since have filled the auditorium with listeners and learned of the service.

It will be a big day. The Bible has set a mark of 250. The evening service will be at 7 o'clock. It is ordinance day. In the Lord's supper will be the Lord's evening Bible service, and in the evening will be the baptismal service. The close of the evening service has been sent word to persons that they will be present every evening to hear him.

The meetings continue all the week. On Sunday night Oakland and over a delegation, and the people of that place are with the one here. The people here are making special plans for an interesting meeting.

MR ELLWOOD MEETS MOLLY AT THE DOOR.

Chapter XXXVIII.

The nurse came, a pleasant faced middle-aged woman, whom one at once instinctively felt could be trusted. I could not help a feeling of relief as she took charge of the invalid.

I was a good nurse, owing to my experience with Aunt Agatha, but had no other training, and was glad to shift the responsibility even for a short time. Mrs. Ellwood was sleeping, and I stole quietly away to my room.

"Has Molly come in yet?" Mr. Ellwood asked as I passed the open door of his room.

"No, but I am sure she will be in soon."

"If you are awake ask her to come to me at once."

I moved on to my own room, my heart filled with pity for the man I had learned to respect so highly. His son incapable of thinking straight, his daughter thoughtlessly chasing the will-o'-the-wisp of pleasure, his wife so ill.

An hour passed. Twice I had crept down to the invalid's room, but a sign from the nurse had quietly withdrawn. Mrs. Ellwood was still sleeping, the drugged sleep that only gave her relief from pain.

Another hour. I heard a door open, voices, and hurried into the hall, my heart beating wildly, fearful Mrs. Ellwood might be worse.

Under the hall lamp stood Molly and her father. Even from where I stood I could see that she was not herself, that she had been drinking. Her voice was shrill, and she said uncertainly:

"Your mother is very ill and you—"

Mr. Ellwood's voice trembled.

Molly glanced up and saw me and shrilled:

"You told! You sent that meddling doctor after me!"

"No, Molly, I didn't tell—anyone but him. Your mother was taken very much worse—we were afraid. Come with me."

And although she resisted, I led her upstairs, and into my room. Her father had neither moved to assist me, nor spoken. He seemed stunned, a look of horror on his face.

I turned when I reached the head of the stairs just in time to see him stagger toward the library, then the door closed.

"Oh, Molly, how could you? Your father looks heart-broken!"

"Nothing to break his heart over. The booze Don had was rotten stuff. Went to my head. I'll be all right in a minute. What'd you send me for? I was having a bully time. Don't like that man Milbank—hate him!"

Her speech was hesitating, thick. I helped Molly off with her clothes, bathed her head, made her lie down, and then went to the kitchen and made her a cup of strong coffee, thankful that the servants had retired.

After a while she sat up, drank the coffee, and seemed to realize something unusual had happened.

"What is it, Rita? What's the matter? You look solemn as an owl."

"She laughed nervously."

"Your mother is very ill—we were afraid. She asked for you, and I had to send. I wouldn't tell your father or Guy, but I had to find you, so sent the doctor."

"Mother isn't—going to die?"

"We hope not but she is very ill indeed, and with her weak heart such a spell is very serious."

Molly covered her face with her hands. Slow tears trickled through her fingers. Her nervousness was palpable. She trembled pitiably.

"Don't cry Molly. She may want you, and you must be cheerful."

With an effort she composed herself. She had a strong will, and it had always been a wonder to me that she could not control her appetite.

I tried to dissuade her, but in vain. I knew the nurse was to be depended on, so I let her go, standing at the head of the stairs watching her.

The door of the library was open, her father came out and drew her within. Then he closed the door.

Would he be gentle and kind, or would he be angry? How I longed to know as the time passed, and the door remained closed. Finally Molly came out, and with her head high, a look of intense anger on her face, she came up the stairs, into her own room. I heard the key turn in the lock.

They had quarreled.

Tomorrow: I suspect Molly Cares For Rush Milbank.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by
MRS. ELLSBURY
(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News-Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I want your advice on a matter that is very near to my heart. I read your advice to others every day, and think it is very interesting. When I used to live here I was engaged to a very nice young man, and we broke the engagement before I went away a year ago. We quarrelled, and didn't seem to be able to make it up so we let it go at that. We haven't corresponded, and since I have come back, he has made no attempt to see me. I hear he has not gone with any other girl while I have been gone.

I still think a great deal of him, and believe that if we have a chance we can get along all right. Now would I be doing the wrong thing if I called him up and asked him to come and see me, or should I try to meet him accidentally, or what? I have puzzled over it, and don't know what to do. I don't want it to appear that I am running after him, but I can see that he will have to have a push in my direction if we ever make it up. Can you help me?

TRUE BLUE: It would be better if you could accidentally meet him, and greet him as you would any old friend. Surely you can arrange to do this. After meeting and chatting with him a moment or two, ask him to come and see you, and renew your old friendship. You can best gauge your own actions after seeing him, by his manner. That would be much better than calling him up.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I have a girl friend who is continually bringing me stories about the boy I go with. Telling me she saw him out with other girls, and all kinds of things to cause trouble. Now Mrs. Ellsbury, do you think she is showing herself a good friend to me to do this. How can I stop her?

SHORTY: If she is telling you the truth it may be that she thinks that is the way to show herself a good friend. However, it would be wise for you not to listen to those things, and tell her plainly that you don't wish to hear tales about your friends.

CANDIDATE FOR SHERIFF

I hereby announce myself a republican candidate for sheriff of Douglas county, at the May primaries. Frank M. Hopkins, Canyonville, Oregon. (Pd. Adv.)

Liberty Theatre.

All photoplay stars look back upon one particular picture as containing their best work. For some reason they entered into their work with peculiar zest during its filming with the result that it stands out in their minds as typifying what they can do when a story is good and a role thoroughly congenial.

Bryant Washburn will be remembered as having appeared in the title role of "Skinner's Dress Suit." Photoplay patrons who saw Washburn in this character will remember how perfectly it fitted him. It has always stood out in this star's mind as the best thing he has ever done.

"I am crazy about 'Temptation'." Washburn said after reviewing the production, "because it's the type of story I have always wanted to appear in. Jack Baldwin, the role assigned me, is an intensely human figure and I understood perfectly his mental process. It wasn't merely a 'fat' part to me, but a chance to enact a living breathing role."

"Temptation" comes to the Liberty theatre commencing Sunday. In the cast supporting Mr. Washburn are such prime local favorites as Eva Novak, June Elvidge, Phillips Smalley, and Vernon Steele. It is described as being a vital story of restless wives and discontented husbands.

Majestic Theatre.

Hackathorne achieves one of the most noteworthy artistic successes of the year in Mrs. Reid's great anti-narcotic production, "Human Wreckage," scheduled for exhibition on Saturday and Sunday at the Majestic theatre. Northrup also acquires himself admirably in many stunningly dramatic scenes.

The one in which they braved death together was a mad taxidriver through the city of Los Angeles and a head-on crash into a plunging railroad locomotive. It is called "the ride to Hell" and, according to critics who already have thrilled to its blazing action, it is no misnomer.

Others in Mrs. Reid's unusual photoplay which is commanding attention throughout the world are James Kirkwood, Bessie Love, Mrs. Wallace Reid (of course), Claire McDowell, Victory Bateman, Robert McKim, Harry Northrup, Eric Mayne, Otto Hoffman, Phillip Sleeman, George Clark and Lucille Ricksen. John Griffith Wray directed and Film Booking Offices of America are distributing the production.

Antlers Theatre.

"Blinky" Gene Markey's famous story of army life, provides a new comedy vehicle for Hoot Gibson in the Universal special production to be shown at the Antlers theatre tonight. It is a mixture of thrills and laughs; it carries the spectator to the climax of an exciting or spectacular situation and then turns it into laughter. In one of the most original stories yet presented by the cowboy star.

"Blinky" is the story of a pampered son of an old army officer who through "pull" wins a commission in the army, and is sent to a border cavalry camp to "break in."

Majestic Theatre.

In the annals of police courts it is seldom found that a criminal has voluntarily accused himself of a crime, especially if that crime happens to be murder, but in "The Love Pirate," the Richard Thomas Production, released by E. B. O., coming to the Majestic theatre tonight a situation is logically evolved in which three people, two women and a man, accuse themselves of killing Steve Carnan, notorious owner of the Blackbird Cabaret.

A remarkable cast was chosen by Producer Richard Thomas for the delineation of the various roles. This cast, headed by Carmel Myers, includes such well-known screen favorites as Kathryn McGuire, Melbourne McDowell, Clyde Fillmore, John Tonkey, Carol Holloway, Edward W. Borman and Spottiswood Aitken.
