ROSEBURG, OREGON, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1924.

FOR AND AGAINST.

A political organizer was inquiring the other day as to the ideas entertained by a certain group of people in one town in whose political movements he was interested. "What are they for?" he asked.

"Well, near as I can find out, they aren't 'for' much of anything," was the reply that he got. "I never heard them come out in favor of anything in particular. But they always seem to be coming out against something. They are always claiming that some project that people want is wrong. If anything in the way of improvement is suggested in the town, they are awfully afraid that some one is going to make some money out of it, so that commonly they take an attitude of being opposed to progressive measures."

How characteristic that is of some people, and there are many towns where there is an element that takes that view. In some places they sway a majority vote, and it becomes difficult to put through advance movements because of the undercurrent of opposition that they create.

Some people get so in the habit of opposition that they try to block things from force of habit. If the more progressive people of a town suggest anything, these habitual opposers jump on it without examination of its merits. Then such a town may lime off into factions, with one trying to pull and the other hanging back. Many towns have gotten into that state of civic mind and it has held them about where they are for years.

But the progress of time tends to weaken the position of these chronic obstructionists. The improved educational facilities of today will make the coming generation of young people more progressive. They are learning the things that are expected in a modern community, and they will not tolerate an attitude of chronic opposition to progress.

The old saying, "murder will out," still fits in very nicely with present day life. After 19 years of seclusion and freedom apparently promised, a man is taken into custody charged with the crime of murder. Thus it is conclusively proven to those who imagine they can defeat the ends of justice there is no positive assurance that the hand of the law may fall upon you at the most unexpected moment—lift you from your present sphere in life and place you on the defensive—charged with the crime of murder. Nineteen years having passed since the alleged crime, the author naturally reaches the belief that he is immune from detection and assumes his tracks have been completely covered up by the long lapse of time intervening since the crime had been committed. But the machinery of the law, though sometimes distressingly slow in moving, usually points out its victim at the least expected moment and presents an array of evidence hard to refute.

Some men who entertain political ambition are not willing to begin at the bottom rounds of political preferment. They would dislike to take a municipal office or serve in the lower branch of a state legislature. They would like to start in higher up. But people who do begin such a career at the bottom have a great advantage, in the knowledge gained by political life, and in their familiarity with the needs of the people and the best ways to do public business. President Coolidge, for instance, was willing to begin as a councilman of his home city, and from there he worked his way up. It takes something of a man's time and attention to serve in a city government position, but good citizens who are willing to accept such office perform a great service to their townsmen, and fit themselves to go higher if they have the ability and desire for public work.

Many people have been worrying because of the scarcity of men to do the rough work of the country. It has seemed to them as if it would be necessary to let in a great multitude of aliens in order to get our roads built and ditches dug. But there are other sources of labor. About 20 high school boys at Cadillac, Michigan, were employed recently on the paving gangs in that city, and the city manager says they are excellent workers. It was interesting to see the husky youths racing with loaded wheelbarrows for the concrete mixer. The country has not made all the use it could of the students who are idle through the summer. Many more of them would like work and would not draw back from the tasks calling for overalls and muscle. They would work with more energy than many of the manual workers you see nowadays.

Keeping everlastingly at a thing usually accomplishes the desired results. Roseburg has sponsored the city beautiful program for the past several years but the true effect of such a procedure had not taken root until the present season. Now everybody is imbued with the spirit of making their homes and general surroundings more pleasing to the eye, which is certainly a most commendable spirit. The goal is worth all the effort advanced and those who have been instrumental in bringing about this condition of affairs are assured that it pays to keep good issues alive, even if they do not meet with ready response at the beginning.

In these days of modern methods of head decorations it is hard to determine whether the hair in the biscuit belongs to mother or father—or the baby in the cradle. The fact certainly cannot be established by the length of the evidence.

Roseburg's auto show is going to be a hummer. The event opens this evening. Don't miss it.

FEWER COMMITTEE MEETINGS (Associated Press Leased Wire.) PARIS, Feb. 27.—Brigadier-General Charles G. Duwez and his expert committee were in session two minutes this morning, after which they adjourned until afternoon. The meetings are becoming shorter and scarcer, indicating that the bulk of the work remaining to be done is harmonized to the individual views of the committee members regarding the facts already developed. This will still require a couple of weeks, it is thought.

WOMAN IS KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) OREGON CITY, Feb. 28.—Mrs. Anna Howard, was killed late last night between Oswego and Dunthorpe when the car driven by Dr. Albert Mount skidded on wet pavement and crashed from the road. Mrs. Howard was returning to Oregon City from Portland with Dr. and Mrs. Mount, whose husband is a brother and professional partner of Dr. Albert Mount. Mrs. Howard has been in charge of the office maintained by the Mount brothers.

WANT APPROACH TO BRIDGE MOVED

At the next session of the county court a resolution will probably be adopted asking the state highway commission to take some action to reduce the danger at the northern approach of the bridge just north of the city limits of Oakland. This is one of the most dangerous spots on the entire highway in Oregon, and for the past month there has been an average of one accident there each day. One man was killed there several months ago, and another badly injured, and each day cars are damaged and lives endangered by the poor approach. The road meets the bridge at almost a right angle and when the autos strike the wooden approach they are apt to skid, even though traveling at a slow rate of speed. This morning a Chevrolet car struck the railing and was damaged quite seriously. Yesterday a Dodge was smashed up at the same point. A heavy timber has been erected as a bumper to prevent cars from going over the edge, but several times each day when the roads are wet and slippery, cars crash into the railings, some being badly damaged. The condition arises from the sharp turn and the slippery boards forming the approach. By re-timbering the approach and turning the boards across the road, it is believed that there would be less danger, and banking the turn, also would aid in eliminating some of the danger. The county court has received numerous complaints regarding this approach, and will probably ask the state highway commission to take some steps to prevent future accidents. A fatal accident occurred there some months ago, when a driver of a car endeavoring to set a speed record went through the railing, having failed to see the turn in time to stop.

DANCE AT LOOKING GLASS Grange Hall, Saturday night, March 1. Everybody invited.

GUN CLUB PLANS BIG PRUNE SHOOT

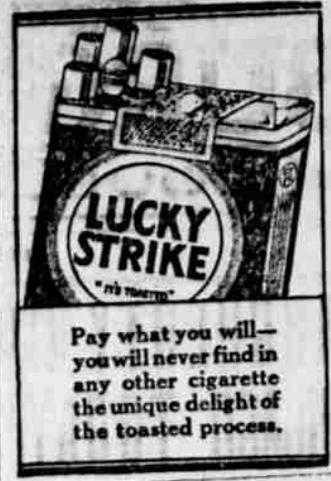

Next Sunday the Roseburg Rod and Gun Club will stage a shoot at their target range on the John Marks ranch, and are offering Douglas county prunes as a prize to successful competitors in the sport. Lunch will be served on the grounds, and since the shoot will continue all day, and is open to all comers from daylight to dark, the sponsors of the affair expect a lot of good wholesome sport. A good many have already planned to go out and make a day of it Sunday.

Everybody will have a chance to win, as yardage handicap will be observed, according to the class a shooter may belong to. In addition to the prune prize, premium hams are offered, and between the two trophies it is believed most everybody can come home with enough food stuff to keep the family for a week or two. There will be plenty of ammunition provided on the ground, so "crack shots" are urged to be on hand early and get in on the game.

Another event that is being arranged for by the Rod and Gun club and the American Legion post is the "Big 49 Show" that will be staged at the armory in this city during March 13-15. As the name suggests, it is the intention of the sponsors to depict life in the wild and woolly west in early days, so visitors to that event may expect to see the old time prospector with his ever-present six shooter and "boots" and the old muzzle loading Kentucky rifle, whose impracticability cleared the west of desperadoes and paved the way for civilization. These entertainments are gotten up with the idea of bringing Roseburg and Douglas county to the attention of "foreign" peoples not only in the east but in the up-state districts.
