LAUREL WORTHING CONFIDES IN RITA

Chapter XLVII.

After I had seen Mrs. Ellwood made comfortable for the night, had read to her, and chatted a while, telling her what Mollie wore, and so on, I went to my room, and a little later Laurel tapped on my door asking if I were sleepy, or if she might come in and chat a little while.

"Do," I replied.

"I scarcely ever go to sleep before Mollie comes in."

We talked of all sorts of things for a while, then she led me on to speak of Mollie. Mrs. Ellwood had told her of her hope that Mollie and Rush Millbank would marry, and she asked me if I thought Mollie cared.

"Of course the doctor does," she said.

"I think he is fascinated with her," I felt myself flushing.

"But he is very different from the young men in her set, more dignified, quiet."

"Then they aren't engaged?"

"No. I am sure I should know if they were."

"I have a feeling that she is dangerous Rita. You'll think me silly but I can't help it. I should die if she stole him. I never saw him so intrigued before. He has not seen her since she was a young girl, you know. And she is so lovely, so vivacious, so everything I am not."

"Nonsense, Laurel, whatever put such a notion into your head?" In spite of what I had observed I was shocked.

"I don't really know, but ever since we came I have been depressed, felt as if something were going to happen, something hateful to me."

I made some light reply, not knowing what to say. She paid no attention but went on:

"It is terrible to love anyone as I love Jim. To feel that life is only worth living because of him. When he is away from me I am miserable. When he is with me I watch every moment to see if he shows any sign of ceasing to love me. I don't know why I talk to you like this, only that it is a relief to speak of it to someone. He never looked at me tonight, his eyes only for Mollie. And he forgot—to kiss me when he left."

Her lips quivered like a hurt child's.

Surely she was morbid, neurotic. He has never given you cause, Laurel, to feel this way, I am sure. You must not—"

"I never have spoken of it to a living soul. But he has—once. I thought my heart would break. We had been married only a year, she was lovely too, like Mollie. Oh, I can't talk of it even to you. It was too humiliating!"

She covered her face with her hands.

Distressed, not knowing how to comfort, I reached out and took down her hands.

"You mustn't Laurel. That nothing came out of the incident should prove he means nothing."

"Nothing came of it because I loved him too well to let him go. But I knew he wanted to."

"Why don't you do the things he does?" I asked.

"Dance and play the out-door games he likes?"

"I can't Rita. My heart is weak. I nearly died of grief—that time. The doctors have cautioned me, said I must not do anything strenuous or I would die. And I can't leave him."

My heart ached with pity for the sweet little woman whose love made her unhappy, yet who clung to the unhappiness rather than lose him. I still thought her foolishly apprehensive. I changed the subject, tried to get her mind off from her fears. After a little she brightened, and when she said goodnight I was sure she was happier. But after she left me I sat quietly thinking of all she had said.

My experience with married life had been only what I had seen of the Ellwoods, the remembrance of my own father and mother, kind always, devoted to each other. Her story was like a book of fiction, interesting me.

It was two o'clock when I stopped my dreamy thinking and started to prepare for bed. I felt hungry, and knowing the cook always left something in the ice box for such a contingency, I threw on a kimono and went quietly down stairs.

Taking a sandwich and a glass of milk I retraced my steps. When I reached the door of the dining room into the hall I heard voices and drew back into the darkness of the room. Only the night light burned in the hall. But in its faint glow I saw Mollie and Jim, and then suddenly he caught her in his arms, and kissed her, she pulling back, but laughing.

"You lovely creature, you drive me mad!" I heard him say, as with a light laugh, and a kiss blown from her fingertips, she eluded him and flew up the stairs. I didn't move until I heard first her door, then his, close. Then I crept up to my room, my heart wrung with pity for Laurel, a feeling about marriage I never before had experienced.

PICTURE CLASSIC PROVES SENSATION

It proved a sensation, and surpassed even the glowing advance press notices.

So declared Manager Goux commenting on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which opened Saturday at The Antlers Theatre, and which positively closes its engagement tonight.

Manager Goux was unable to accommodate the crowds, and urges everyone to see the picture tonight as it will not be brought back to Roseburg in more than a year.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" has been produced on a magnificent scale. The settings are magnificent beyond words and stamped with authenticity and fidelity to detail that places them far above anything that has ever come out of Hollywood.

Lon Chaney has the role of Quasimodo, the poor twisted dwarf who rang the bells of Notre Dame and served as a fulcrum on which Victor Hugo balanced the plot of his novel. This performance transcends anything that Mr. Chaney has ever done before. In creating this weird role he has used both his make-up box and his head to tremendous advantage. Others in the cast are Patsy Ruth Miller, Ernest Torrence, Raymond Hutton, Tully Marshall, Gladys Brockwell, Brandon Hurst, Winnifred Bryson and Norman Kerry.

AUTO LICENSES GROWING

Secretary of State Sam Kozar spent yesterday in this city, installing an auto registration bureau here. During this year Oregon's motor licenses have far exceeded all former records, Mr. Kozar states. Up to March 4, the state has licensed 132,500 automobiles, as compared with 104,000. The total receipts collected up to the present time amount to $3,504,000, while for a like time in 1923 they were $2,787,000, an increase of $716,634.

QUARTETTE IS FEATURE

The Avalon Male Quartette, of the Eugene Bible University, sang at all of the series of the Christian church of this city yesterday. The quartette is a fine organization and each member is an artist. Several solo numbers were presented in addition to the group selections. The audience at the evening service packed the auditorium to capacity and many expressions of pleasure were heard regarding the work of the quartette. The church is making an effort to have the young men return for the Easter service.

SCHOOL MAY BUY ATHLETIC FIELD

The senior class of the Roseburg high school has proposed the purchase of the Laurelwood Athletic field, and the proposition may take concrete form in the near future. The seniors have proposed to sacrifice their annual banquet and to donate all of the proceeds from their annual play to the purchase of this piece of property, and if the plan is accepted the junior class play and the opera money will probably go to the same purpose. If, however, the high school buys this property it will probably need some outside help, as the field will cost probably around $7,500. It will be necessary for some organization to stand responsible and give the students some assistance. Whether or not any organization will undertake to do this has not yet been ascertained. In the event the plan is adopted the various student activities will be devoted to the payment of the debt until the field is purchased.

At the present time the Laurelwood field is the only available athletic park. If it is cut up and sold for building lots, as is planned, the high school will have no place for its track, baseball, and football contests and consequently the students are greatly interested in the plan. The city now has a proposal before it to buy the field and the adjoining park, but as yet no action has been taken. It is possible that the city and the high school may get together in some sort of an agreement whereby the entire tract may be purchased, the city taking the park and the school the athletic field, with a specified agreement concerning the use of each being entered by both parties.

IMPROVEMENTS MADE

S. J. Shoemaker is completing some fine improvements to the building occupied by the Roseburg Book Store. A large basement has been excavated and concrete floors and walls put in, the interior has been remodeled, and will be retined as soon as the carpenters complete their work.

O. A. C. BAND COMING TO ROSEBURG MAR. 18

The Oregon Agricultural College military band will give a concert and dance here at the Armory Tuesday, March 18th when it stops on its nineteenth annual concert tour through southern Oregon and northern California. Thirty-six men will be selected from the college organization by Captain L. Beard, director for 12 years, to make this nine-day tour during the college spring vacation. The trip is being made in a special car to save time.

By giving concerts and dances at the towns visited the organization is made self-supporting. The band orchestra which plays at most of the student body dances and many private receptions at Corvallis is considered one of the best on the college campus. Many of the young musicians in this college musical organization were leaders in well known bands of the state. The drum major used the Sclots Band of San Jose, Cal., that won first place in the marching contest at San Francisco more than a year ago.

Several trips have already been made by the band since school started last October. It accompanied the college football team to Boise for the Idaho-O. A. C. game on Armistice day, to Portland for the Multnomah club-O. A. C. game on Thanksgiving day, and to Eugene for the annual U. of O.-O. A. C. game. On each trip made the band was well received.

Stops will be made at Roseburg, Medford, Weed, and Yreka, California, Klamath Falls, Ashland and Grants Pass. With the experience and training the band has had this year and with the many skilled and well known musicians composing different sections the band should make an even greater impression on the towns visited on this tour than it did on its tour of Southern Oregon four years ago.

JUDGE WONACOTT HERE FOR VISIT

Former County Judge Wonacott, who now lives at Gresham, accompanied by Mrs. Wonacott, Mrs. Maud Glover, their daughter, of San Francisco and Mr. Edward Wonacott, arrived here from the north last night, and today drove on to Myrtle Creek, where they will visit with relatives and friends for a few days. Judge Wonacott was glad to get back to Roseburg once more and greet his hosts of friends in this city. Two weeks ago yesterday, Judge Wonacott stated, there was a family reunion at his Gresham home, the occasion being the seventieth birthday of Mrs. Wonacott. All five of the children were home for the event, and a delightful time was enjoyed. Both Judge and Mrs. Wonacott are looking well despite the ever increasing years. They will visit in Roseburg before returning north.
