ROSEBURG, OREGON, THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1924.

EARLY OREGON ROMANCE.

A romance of early Oregon, in which the principals were the poet, Joaquin Miller, and Minnie Dyer, also an Oregon writer, was related recently by Professor John B. Horner to his Oregon history classes at the Oregon Agricultural college.

"Joaquin Miller was first known in literary circles as Giles Gaston, and Minnie Dyer as Minnie Myrtle," said Professor Horner.

"They were contributors to the Eugene Review of which Miller was manager. In response to an editorial request, she gave him her name and address. An invitation to her home was accepted.

"Along the trail to the Dyer home the poet saw a boy chopping wood in a Coquille forest. The boy was attracted by the rugged face of the rider, made more commanding by a ready weapon strapped to his side, and by a dauntless, dare-devil expression. The boy was Binger Hermann, who later became congressman from Oregon and United States land commissioner at Washington.

"Upon arriving at Port Orford late Thursday afternoon, the poet, mounted on his charger and costumed in frontier garb, met Miss Dyer for the first time. To her he was graceful. To him she was beautiful. Cupid, therefore, plied his art easily.

"Sunday morning a shy young judge made one of his regular calls. He was met at the door by Miss Minnie and her new friend. Upon introducing her two suitors to each other, she disappeared. Whereupon Mr. Miller said, 'Judge, I'll have a word with you, sir. Miss Minnie and I are to be married in a few moments, and you are to have the honor of performing the ceremony.'

"Marrying another fellow to one's own best girl was a legal procedure with which the timid judge was unfamiliar. But as soon as he regained his poise the judge performed the ceremony, which was as awkwardly done as it was embarrassing to himself.

"The three-day courtship of Joaquin Miller with his gifted Minnie Myrtle was followed by the customary honeymoon. Later there was a long storm during which it seemed as if a thousand fond hopes would be shipwrecked. But one day, in after years, the storm ceased. The sky was again serene. It seemed more beautiful than ever, for a reconciliation had finally been effected. They were happy in each other once more, and beneath the sky stood the poet waving a last farewell to his bride of the sea, as she was sailing out across the bar."

Crimes committed by former service men following the war are chargeable in many instances to effects of combat, and to hasty discharge from service, according to Wm. J. Keville, United States marshal. Keville's statement was made during a hearing conducted by the state legislative committee on military affairs, on the bill proposed by the American Legion for a survey of cases of all ex-service men in Massachusetts prisons. The bill as presented is based on findings of the national organization that many such men now in penal institutions should be given mental treatment as a result of their war disabilities. "One of the mistakes of this war," declared Keville, "was that the men were discharged so soon after the struggle. They should have been kept in service until physically and mentally right to take their places in the community. Many of these men have come out into civil life and have gone wrong and the majority of these who have done so because of the effects of their service. You can't teach a man viciousness and expect to bring him back to a normal state of mind with the stroke of a pen," he concluded.

The Standard Oil company is to be commended for taking the first step to do away with advertising signs on the main highways of the state. Realizing the big board signs detract from the natural beauty along the highways the company has ordered them removed. This is being done at no small expense, taking into consideration the initial cost of construction, and shows a spirit of progressiveness that should be emulated by other concerns that have taken advantage of this method of advertising. The example set by the Standard Oil company to eliminate those things that detract from the state's natural beauty spots along the highways is the first concrete step for carrying out a program that has long been a matter of more than ordinary importance in the minds of the people, and one that has been the cause of much unfavorable comment by those interested in Oregon's natural beauty.

A third party is in formation with the idea of holding a national convention June 27, with a platform something like this: "Public ownership, government banking and public control of all natural resources and restoration of civil liberties guaranteed by the constitution," and a few other planks designed to get the voter.

If the farmer waits for the government to lift him out of his predicament there won't be much to lift when his turn comes. Most of the agriculturists will be playing a harp or shoveling fuel before congress even gets under headway to do those things that it had been expected to do months ago.

JAPS INTERFERE WITH AMERICANS

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) TOKIO, March 12.—Japanese military authorities have frustrated an attempt by J. P. McCullough, and D. F. MacLaughlin, American surveyors representing Sinclair Oil interests to enter the northern section of the island of Saghalien and have taken the two on a Japanese gunboat from Saghalien to the port of Otaru in Hokkaido, it became known today.

The Americans, accompanied by a Russian guide, were stopped at Alexandrovsk by military officials who declared a determination not to permit representatives of an American company to conduct surveys under concessions from the Soviet government, which Japan does not recognize.

McCullough and MacLaughlin are believed to have gone to Peking. The Japanese press took occasion to comment on the possibilities of a grave issue between American and Japan over the valuable oil fields.

Northern Saghalien, nominally is Russian territory, but now is under Japanese military occupation. Powerful Japanese interests are planning oil exploitation there.

The Sinclair Oil company holds a concession granted by the Soviet regime to prospect for petroleum on Saghalien island, but the Japanese have refused to recognize any agreement between Russia and any other country regarding the concession, so long as the northern portion of the island is occupied by the Japanese. The Japanese have spent large sums involving in the Saghalien fields.

BURGLAR CAUGHT STEALING JEWELRY

(Associated Press Leased Wire.) PENDLETON, March 13.—J. J. Murray, alias Sam Stewart smashed the plate glass window of a local jewelry store last night and got away with a lot of loot, consisting mostly of watches, according to the police.

Aroused by a porter in the next building, a posse headed by Night Policeman Stanley gave spirited chase and following the alleged burglar by a trail of blood, from a cut in his hand, said to have been caused by breaking the window with a piece of tin, pursued him through a rooming house and out on the street. The posse captured him after Stanley's third shot had hit him in the right hip and lodged in his right groin.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

SAYS PRICE MEETINGS CAUSED MUCH DISSENTION

Roseburg, Ore., March 13. Editor News-Review: Last night I read with much interest the article by Hon. B. L. Eddy, dealing with the religious conditions of Roseburg. I feel sure that Mr. Eddy wrote this article in the best of spirit, and from actual knowledge. After a year's experience in the matter, he should fully know the situation, his own congregation possibly being the most effected. Mr. Eddy reached the conclusion of the position that this writer held from the beginning. We had to undergo severe criticism, and lose some good friends for the position we took, but we feel that the article of Mr. Eddy fully vindicates the position that we have held. The writer of this article said in a preacher's meeting that the coming of Evangelist Price would create division in every church in town, and cause hard feelings between friends. We knew this had been the condition in other towns. The churches of Roseburg have always worked together in a most friendly way, until within the last year, the feeling has not been so good. We trust that the feeling of good will and fellowship may return to the religious life of Roseburg, and all these things may be forgotten. I feel for one that I want to congratulate Mr. Eddy for his article, and for the stand he has taken. Respectfully, C. H. HILTON. See Clinnie and Julie, the newlyweds, "Adam and Eva."
