SERVICES in the CHURCHES

What God Says about—THE LAODICEANS

"And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write * * * Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind and naked."

A powerful poem appeared some time ago in the Weekly Review, from which I quote two stanzas:
"We are the Laodiceans; we know not the ice nor the fire;
We have never sprung to the edge of doom at the call of a brave desire;
We have basked in the tepid noon tides; we have drawn an even breath;
We have never felt between our lips the savors of life or death.

We are the Laodiceans; we have slight fear of hell,
For even its Master cannot say, 'Ye have done my bidding well.'
And what for us would heaven be, with its endless lift and range?
We are doomed to a passionless limbo, that knows not life nor change."

Ah, but the poem is too hasty, for Jesus says to these same Laodiceans, "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed,
* * * As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore, and repent."

International Bible Students Ass'n. Study at the Moose Hall every Sunday at 10:20 a. m. The subjects for study Sunday will be "Justice Manifested," and the "Atonement Mediator." In the manifestation of divine justice God said to Adam, "Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat; for in the day that thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die." (Gen. 2:17 Margin.) This sentence was pronounced against man, the being, the soul. If there could be any doubt about this, it is definitely settled by another statement in the Bible which reads, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezekiel 18:4) "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?"—Psalm 89:48. Friday evening (tonight) at 8 p. m. Dr. R. L. OIL COMMITTEE WANTS SINCLAIR that there is to be criminal prosecution. Littleton said, constituted another reason why the committee should not question Sinclair.

"What harm could be done to Mr. Sinclair if he testified, if he has a just cause?" asked Senator Walsh.

"Just the harm you would suffer if you were subjected to present your case before a mob on the street," returned Littleton. "You tell me you want to examine my client when he has been sued and may be indicted, and compel in an ex parte proceeding to make a statement."

"If he is afraid of an indictment, he has ample protection," said Senator Walsh.

"Yes," replied the attorney. "You want to bring him before you and compel him to take refuge under the plea that he might incriminate himself."

"Should we excuse him on that ground?" asked Walsh.

"No," he replied. "You force us to the odium of pleading a privilege, of driving a man who has been driven to plead to a complaint in the courts and may be indicted—that he must come here before the country and make the statement that he is afraid of being incriminated."

"You propose to drive him to that humiliation. It is an outrage. A reversal of all traditions of the law."

"We do not agree with that," said Walsh.

"It is a monstrous proposition," shouted Littleton. "We will meet you in the courts where you have sent us and fight it out. Do not drive us into a foul atmosphere and make a declaration which will throw odium on us to the ends of the earth."

When Littleton had finished, Senator Walsh said Sinclair had been called for examination "on matters he might have testified about when he was on the stand before."

There was an argument among Senators as to whether the committee should decide the questions raised in public or in private. Senator Spencer, republican, Missouri, suggested an adjournment to study the matter, but Senator Walsh declared it unnecessary.

Senator Bursum, republican, New Mexico said he believed the committee "should proceed with the examination." Senators Kendrick, democrat, Wyoming and Cameron, republican, Arizona, said they wanted time to consider it. Chairman Ladd declared he favored bringing the witness before the committee.

Senator Walsh said he wanted to give Sinclair every right that he would have in court but he did not think the question of "fairness so eloquently presented to us" carried any weight.

The committee adjourned without deciding whether Sinclair should be questioned.

Soon after the committee adjourned, Senator Dill, democrat, Washington, a member, started a debate in the senate in which he declared Littleton's appearance in the case demonstrated powerful influences were at work to stop further investigation.

Recalling Littleton had questioned the authority of congressional committee to summon witnesses, Senator Dill said: "It was significant that this move should be made just when we were about to question Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Hays (Will H. Hays) regarding the reported fund of $750,000 raised by oil stock to pay campaign debts." It also was to be noted "that the great eastern newspapers all began to find this inquiry nauseating on the very day we exposed the telegrams from the White House to McLean—the man who confessed he lied to the committee.

"They didn't think so," he continued, "until we began to get close to big republican officials. Until then, with comparatively small culprits involved, they were content; now we find the most brilliant member of the New York bar retained to head off the committee."

Senator Reed, democrat, Missouri, suggested that the sickening effect, was heightened by the "fact that the department of justice is paralyzed and actually is used to protect some of the culprits; that the chief executive has failed to put some one at the head of the bureau who would put its machinery in motion."
