IMPROVE FISH HATCHERIES

Number of improvements to be made to the salmon and trout hatcheries at the North Umpqua and the local Red and Gunnish hatcheries, has been assured by Hugh J. Dwyer, director of hatcheries for the Fish Commission and Oregon state superintendent of hatcheries, who inspected both the hatcheries and the trout plant at the North Umpqua hatchery. The improvements to be made to the hatcheries at the North Umpqua and the local Red and Gunnish hatcheries, will be completed in June, it was stated.

SERVICE IS GREAT

Whether the Sun makes the following comment on the efforts of the News-Review to give its subscribers a better service.

Roseburg News-Review mid-week edition, but it is a good one, Winchester, Sutherlin, Oakland and others along the coast didn't get the News-Review. When Bert and the Shasta limited left, he took the papers into his sack and gave them to the Shasta to take to the coast. On a previous occasion, when the News-Review failed to make contact with the train, Bert took the papers to Sutherlin by the News-Review gives subscribers a better service.

Attendance at the history of school on this Easter Sunday at the local Red and Gunnish hatcheries, was very good. We will have a contest. Come and be one of the winners. Christian Bible

EDWARDS RETAINS WRESTLING TITLE

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
PENDINGTON, April 19.—Billy Edwards, light heavyweight wrestling champion of the world, retained his title in a thrilling match here with Ray McCarroll, the Pendington bulldozer last night when he secured the long fall of the match with his deadly headlock after one hour and 20 minutes of wrestling. McCarroll had Edwards in trouble many times in the first hour but the clever bridging and general strategy of the champion saved him repeatedly from a fall. The match was speedy and bitterly contested from start to finish.

GROUND GLASS IS SERVED IN FOOD

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
CHICAGO, April 19.—Fifteen persons are under physicians' care and Ella Edlich, a housemaid, is held by police, while food, thought to contain ground glass, served at a dinner party last night at the home of Dr. Val C. Freedman, prominent physician is being analyzed. Two are seriously ill. The girl was employed at the Freedman home and was discharged because she had broken three glasses. She denied all knowledge of the food. Dr. Freedman was one of the physicians called several years ago to attend guests stricken during a banquet given in honor of the then Archbishop Mundelein.

D. A. R. PROGRAM VERY LIGHT TODAY

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
WASHINGTON, April 19.—Daughters of the American Revolution, rather tired after strenuous night sessions lasting until well after midnight on three occasions, welcomed a light program today for the two sessions closing the convention. Action on several resolutions, including two endorsing the immigration bill, and installation of newly elected officers, provided their principal tasks today.

RED STEVEDORES FORM A SOVIET

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
FORT WAYNE, Ind., April 19.—Some improvement today by physicians attending Clara Kimball Young, screen and stage actress, who was stricken during a performance here last Tuesday night. Miss Young suffered a relapse last night and physicians said an operation might be necessary for appendicitis. It was said today, however, the operation might be avoided.

A helpful Easter sermon will be heard at the Baptist church Easter morning at 11:00. You are invited.

THE HALF-TIME WIFE By VIOLET DARE

WHO'S WHO IN THE STORY.

SUZANNE ATWOOD, the young bride of GEOFFREY ATWOOD, a prominent business man, is faced by the fact that his secretary.

LINDA VALE, is trying to come between them. Angry because Geoffrey has been seen with Mrs. Vale when she thought him out of town, Suzanne determines to flirt with DUNCAN HALE, a young army officer to whom she was once engaged, although she is devoted to Geoffrey and to his two nephews, DICK and LARRY LEIGH.

XXI—A NEW DEAL.

W H E N Suzanne came down the stairs half an hour later her face showed no signs of the stormy interview that had taken place between her and her husband. She had shadowed her eyes carefully with faint blue make-up.

touching her cheeks with rose color, had her maid brush her hair until its golden curls lay sleek and smooth beneath the jeweled butterfly of her headpiece.

No one would have suspected that she felt quite sure her heart was broken—not even Linda Vale suspected it, as she paused just inside the front door.

"Oh, Mrs. Vale!" Suzanne's tone was honey sweet. "I do feel that I've been cheated, having to rush away to the Merrimans this evening. But you know how it is, one simply doesn't dare offend such people." She knew that Linda Vale would have given the eyes out of her head to be asked to dine at the Merrimans. "And I know that you'll make poor old Geoff have a good time; he won't even know that I'm not here. Do sit at the foot of the table and play hostess, won't you?"

Linda Vale's eyes narrowed. She had thought Suzanne rather a fool—just a pretty young girl who would be no adversary at all for a woman of the world. And now here was Suzanne making remarks that, if they were guileless as they sounded, were nevertheless singularly apt.

"Why, I—yes, of course I'll be hostess," she replied; then, with a sly little smile, "But aren't you afraid that I'll try to get the position permanently, and your husband along with it?"

Suzanne's blue eyes were as clear as a baby's.

"Oh, not at all," she retorted airily, gathering her sable-collared evening wrap closer about her. "Geoff knows women too well." And with one more charming smile she walked gracefully out of the door, leaving a puzzled woman behind her.

She was gaily itself at the Merrimans' large and very formal dinner; Mrs. Merriman, a power in the city, paused beside her for a moment exclaiming, "My dear, you're the loveliest thing I ever saw, and Geoff Atwood should be publicly congratulated for marrying you and bringing you to our town. By the way, where is Geoffrey?"

"Oh, the poor boy had to work this evening," replied Suzanne regretfully. "He's been away for several days, and things piled up dreadfully."

"I saw him yesterday, lunching with that secretary of his," commented Mrs. Merriman. "Too bad he can't even take a rest during meal time. I shall tell him so!"

Suzanne murmured something unintelligible and went away to talk with Mrs. Merriman's old and very erratic father, whom everyone else avoided as the plague. Mrs. Merriman nodded approvingly, and confided to her husband that night that Geoff Atwood was a fool who didn't know his luck.

"Running around with that Vale woman, when he's married to such a charming girl—I'm ashamed of him!" she exclaimed vigorously. "I intend to take that child under my wing and see that she has a good time, if he's going to be working every evening or out of town!"

Suzanne was glad to sit quietly beside Mrs. Merriman's father and pretend to listen to his endless reminiscences. What was Geoff saying to Mrs. Vale? Did he really like her so well? Why had he lunched with her yesterday, and not even told his own wife that he was in town? It was to that question that she returned over and over again.

There was a light in the library when she got home, and she heard Geoff's voice, but she went to her own room without first speaking to him.

"He can come and speak to me if he wants to," she told herself, and then went to bed and lay listening eagerly for the sound of his footsteps. After some time she heard a car drive away from the house; there was an interval, and then her husband came up the stairs, slowly. Would he stop at her door? She held her breath, waiting. It seemed to her that he hesitated beside her door; then he went on again, to his own room. She cried herself to sleep.

Geoffrey had gone to his office when she came downstairs late the next morning; it was the first time she had missed having breakfast with him when he was in town, and she could not help wondering if he minded the omission.

Miss Eva Colyer who has been spending the past eight months in this city as a special nurse left last evening for Portland where she has accepted a position in the United States Government Hospital.

Mrs. W. J. Burden and daughter, Miss Frances, of Sutherlin were in town for a few hours yesterday morning shopping and visiting with friends.

Earl Burr left yesterday morning for Portland where he will spend the week and attending to business matters. Mr. Burr made the trip by automobile.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Chapman, who have been spending the past week in Portland and Spokane returned to their home in Roseburg yesterday morning. While in Spokane they attended the Rotary convention.

Dr. L. A. Dillard who has been spending the past two or three days in Portland where he was called on account of the illness of his mother returned to his home in Roseburg yesterday morning.

Dr. Bell and county health nurses Grady and Post visited the schools at Glendale yesterday where they made an inspection of the school house and grounds and examined a number of the students.

Suffers Cerebral Hemorrhage—Mrs. John Pennies, of West Roseburg, who was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage earlier in the week is reported considerably improved today. This is the second stroke the lady has suffered. Although advanced in years, the attending physician and friends of the family anticipate that Mrs. Pennies will soon be up and about the house again.

ELECTRIC SIGN INSTALLED—C. W. Parker, proprietor of the Roseburg Garage, has installed in front of his garage on Rose street, a fine new electric sign, which makes a decided improvement in the appearance of the entire street. The sign is quite large and is all electrically lighted. It was installed by C. E. Chowler of the Electric Shop.
