THE HALF-TIME WIFE

By VIOLET DARE

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED.

DUNCAN HALE, a young army officer, returns from the Philippines to find that

SUZANNE, with whom he is in love, has married

GEOFFREY ATWOOD, a prominent man much older than she.

Hale tries to persuade her to leave her husband, get a divorce and marry him, feeling sure that she still cares for him. Suzanne is troubled by this, and by the report that there is a love affair between

DICK LEIGH, Geoffrey's nephew, and a chorus girl.

LINDA VALE, Atwood's secretary, introduces herself to Suzanne, and makes a determined effort to interfere between husband and wife.

At Dick's request, Suzanne gives a little party for the chorus girl, LOLETA. Mrs. Vale manages to be asked, and I won't have it. Why, you're trying to make out that I'm a thief

"You tried to be one, the other day," Suzanne cut in. "You were going to steal those savings, at the exhibition in the hotel, and then when the detective threatened to search us all you dropped them on the floor. Lolita and I both saw you."

Linda Vale knew when she was beaten. But she turned on Suzanne such a look of hate that the girl shrank back in a corner. To Geoffrey she appealed for pity, even in that last moment, but his gaze was stern.

"Oh, very well," she said at last, with a little shrug of her shoulder. "You'll find them in the dressing case—you weren't smart enough to do it."

"There's a false lining; they're under that." She waited until Geoffrey had brought them forth triumphantly, then swept from the room.

"Oh, Geoff, are we really through with her?" asked Suzanne. "I don't see, though, even now, why you let her run over me so."

XLVIII—HAPPINESS AT LAST

WHAT is it? What's the matter?"

"Oh Geoffrey," exclaimed Mrs. Vale, clinging to him with both hands.

"This is dreadful, Suzanne was going through my things—she was robbing me."

"Geoff, I wasn't," cried Suzanne.

"You were looking through my dressing case."

"Yes, I was," answered Linda Vale's accusation, but faced her husband, who was gently but firmly detaching Mrs. Vale's hands from his arm.

"She has some papers of yours, papers that mean a great deal to you. She must have stolen them. They are those letters you told me had disappeared, the letters that would prove you had not been mixed up in your partner's illegal transactions."

"I wanted to get them. So I came up here, but they weren't in my dressing case. That's what I was looking for. I wasn't going to rob her of anything that was really hers."

"You have those letters of Henry's?" demanded Geoffrey, turning to Linda Vale.

She said nothing.

"Tell me, have you got those letters?" he insisted. "I should have suspected you, when Suzanne told me weeks ago that you were able to open the safe here at the house, but somehow I didn't."

"You needn't try to accuse me, in an effort to shield your wife," Mrs. Vale retorted. "I don't know anything about those letters."

"Oh, mother!"

All three turned abruptly as Lolita spoke from the door way. Dick stood beside her, his mothering coat thrown back.

"We heard you scream just as we came up the drive," Lolita went on. "Evidently we were just in time. Mother, you know you gave those letters. Why don't you give them to Mr. Atwood?"

"I don't know what you're talking about," Mrs. Vale exclaimed. "Suzanne was going through my things and growing searier, the gateway to Panama and the southern doorway of the continent. Tell 'em about our excellent public schools, and the college atop of Spring Hill. Say a word or two about the Satsumas that withstood a temperature of 12 degrees above zero and an industry that survived even that heavy blow. Blow a little, yourself.

Roseburg, Oregon, which tells the world that it is "Out in God's Front Yard," has entered into reciprocal relations in this respect with the other organizations of like character throughout the country and the idea is so good that The Mobilizer takes pleasure in passing it along. Your chamber of commerce membership will give you an additional point of contact with every city you visit.

VIOLET DARE

"I've never been so happy in my life."

"Because I thought you didn't care about me, and would prefer to deal with me through her," he answered.

"For such a brilliant man you're very unreasonably and very dense," she told him. "I should think you'd have known better from the first."

The next morning Lolita came to the house again.

"Everything's simply wonderful for us," she told Suzanne. "Geoffrey's going to let Dick go to work right away, and we're to live in the little apartment, and nobody else in the world is as lucky as I am."

Suzanne knew that she was wrong. But all she said to Lolita was "I've never been so happy in my life, myself."

And that fact was apparent. Everyone seemed to notice it, from the chauffeur to Mrs. Haynes.

"Things should have been this way in the beginning," Geoffrey told her as they drove home that evening. "I'll never be dense again."

"Certainly you won't," she laughed. "When Mrs. Vale was with you in the office I was hardly a half-time wife, but now that the whole job is mine, you'll never have any doubts about me again."
