ROSEBURG, OREGON, SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1934.

THE ADVANCE OF CO-EDUCATION.

The admission of the two sexes on equal terms and into the same class rooms in colleges and universities, was once a heretical novelty. But it has become the custom in the great majority of such institutions of the central and western states. In many colleges, however, particularly in the eastern states, it is still strongly opposed. But even in the east co-education gains ground. Women and girls are reaching out into new fields of effort, and they demand just as good opportunities as men have. There is something quite appealing in their desire for achievement, and their winsome manners break down many barriers. Also in many cases, they are more greedy for knowledge than the boys. At Yale, for instance, about 300 girls are now graduate or professional students. They study about everything—art, law, music, etc. A few have worked their way into some ten courses formerly meant only for male undergraduates. Economy is one argument for their admission to colleges formerly reserved for men. "We have our university anyway and it won't cost much more to add a few women to the list. It costs a great deal to give the women instruction by equally good professors in a separate institution," say professors and students who favor the fair ones. They assert that it is good for college boys to have association with intelligent, inspiring girls. Some students of both sexes regard the close restrictions about being in at night, etc., necessary in a co-educational institution, as being rather annoying. Many professors think that the boys, when the girls are near, spend too much time spooning. Some teachers find the girls' presence a handicap to frank discussion. Some professors are said to be diffident, so that the presence of women takes some of the personality out of their talks in class. But there is a tendency for doors once closed to women to open in these days.

The men folks say that hats for their wives and daughters cost a large sum, and more than has to be paid for their own head covering. But the possession of an attractive hat means a lot to a woman. She will skimp in other directions to satisfy her desire in this one. Years ago women's millinery ran to a large extent to grotesque shapes and combinations of color. But taste has advanced, and modern millinery tends toward results good from the artistic viewpoint. The artificial flowers for millinery use show amazing skill and beauty, and it is no wonder that they tempt the women folks. Millinery making is a good craft for artistic young women to study. The improved taste of the average woman makes an opportunity for those who have special taste and skill. Millinery classes are a fine activity for girls' club work not merely helping many girls to make hats for themselves, but promoting interest in handicrafts and housewifery arts.

"I never stopped any efforts of mine because I looked forward to opposition. I was regardless of risks and opposition." In these words Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard university, referred to one of the guiding principles of life at his recent 90th birthday celebration. Dr. Eliot became one of the leading educators of the country, as a result both of his original views, and of the principle that he states above. Therein he differs from the majority of people, who quit efforts at advancement as soon as they run up against obstacles. The best way to become fearless is to master one's work. When a person studies his work with such thoroughness, that he knows it through and through, he feels confidence in the correctness of his ideas, which gives him faith to meet opposition, and ability to show the falsity of criticism.

Huston Thompson, member of the federal trade commission, feels that steps are needed to control the activities of lobbyists who seek to influence congress. He would have such representatives required to register with a government agency. He would also have the government create a bureau of information. Probably such an organization could help congressmen to get correct facts, instead of depending on people who have special interests to push. "The lobby" will always exist. Anyone has a right to ask congressmen for legislation. Corporations have the same right. But one qualification for a good congressman, is the ability to size up people who make appeals to him, and to avoid being unduly influenced by those who are seeking to advance selfish interests.

A man was struck by lightning on a Cleveland golf links while carrying iron golf clubs. This won't deter anyone from playing golf, but it may suggest to some that it is dangerous to handle a hoe.

President Coolidge is shown in a picture carrying a large cane. It might accomplish useful results if knocked on the heads of the congressmen.

If the householder's grass grows slowly, he curses the poor soil. And if it grows fast, he curses the necessity of having to mow it frequently.

Not merely are the fish biting but the sucker crowd are biting of the worthless stock salesmen.

You can't keep a good man down, and the aviators will say so anyway.

PRUNE PICKIN'S

GOOD EVENING FOLKS—

If there is anything
In this world
Which we despise
It's the guy
Who meets you
Face to face
On the main stem,
Gives you a
Hearty handshake
And a cherry word,
And then with
The froth still
Dripping from
His fangs
Slings into an
Ally and slings
Mud with
Slimy hands
At your back—
A polecat
Has more stamina
Than a cur
Of that calibre.

DUMBELL DORA THINKS
KIGY is a broadcastin' station.

Today is the day the livestock parade was held and we wish to announce that this column was not represented in the bull section as is being rumored about the township.

If strawberries cause the hives we'll have the seven-year-itch.

A couple sneaks took their Shebas up in the ferris wheel last eve and took advantage of the situation.

LEST YOU FORGET

In all the rush and hurry
We wish to vent our wrath
It's Saturday night and all of you
Must go and take your bath.

Tonight's the night we all swallow a couple gallons of confetti and get socked in the snoot with a rubber ball.

The strangle hold was not barred at the armory last eve and it's surprisin' how few falls were made durin' the evenin's wrestlin'.

A lot of guys who are always runnin' off at the mouth with some grievance or other are the last ones to show up when there's some decorative to do.

The wild-eyed Ump. Chiefs paraded last eve with their blankets and an act of some not havin' same they substituted bath robes.

Dumbell Dora lead the livestock parade today and wore her sea-weed dress.

J. W. Perkins in full chieftain regalia will appear on the main drag tonight at 7 o'clock astride a short-in' pinto and as a feature of the evenin' will do some of his famous back-back ridin'.

The all-day sucker crop is almost diminished.

Who remembers the time when we turned a balloon loose down on the main stem with a bunch of Roseburg's prominent citizens in the basket attached thereto? They were the good ol' days.

The rural folks were with us today and we take off our chapeaus to those sturdy people who can show us cards and spades when it comes to doin' things.

Oh! Jupe Pluvius had his sprinklin' can on the top shelf all this week and now he can take it down and give us a good wettin' down if he wants to.

A gang of the anti-Volsteadians were tossed in the hogswog last night and are today usin' a cake of ice for a pillow.

The track meet yesterday made us all the more proud of our ol' R. H. S. and Coach Larsen was steppin' high, wide and handsome when the points were finally tallied up with 95 of 'em restin' on the brow of the hometown athletes.

The waterfront was dryer'n heck today on acct. of the drought.

NEAR BIER.
Strew our path with roses.
We want 'em while we're here.
We'd rather have 'em 'neath our feet
Than piled upon the bier.

PROBABLY IN HIS TEETH

SENATE VOTES TO EXONERATE WHEELER

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

WASHINGTON, May 23.—The senate today adopted the majority report of its investigating committee exonerating Senator Wheeler, of the charge of accepting a fee to prosecute oil land claims before the interior department after his election to the senate.

The vote was 56 to 5.

Voting against the committee report were Curtis, Kansas; Phillips, Colorado; Spencer, Missouri; Sterling, South Dakota and Willis, Ohio, all republicans.

A motion to postpone action by Senator Sterling, republican, South Dakota, who filed a minority report from the special committee was voted down 55 to 5. Sterling proposed that the majority report exonerating Senator Wheeler be held in abeyance and that in the meantime no steps be taken to "question" that Senator Wheeler's right to exercise the duties of his membership.

Senator Spencer, republican, Missouri, then offered a resolution which would have modified the committee's sweeping exoneration of Senator Wheeler and would have declared merely that the investigation should disclose overt acts. It was defeated 56 to 8.
