Memorial Day Is Fittingly Observed

Memorial day has lent dignity to the latter part of the week, and Thursday and Friday were filled with formal and informal observance of the sacred occasion. The little red Flanders' poppy becoming known as a symbol of the soldier dead, and of the care which goes to the widows, orphans and dependents of those soldiers, appeared on the streets Thursday, and the ladies of the Legion Auxiliary who sponsored their sale, met with a ready response.

The little poppies flaunting their brave color to an understanding world, have an interesting history. They are made in the hospitals by the disabled ex-soldiers, who enjoy the work because of its importance to the dependents of ex-service men. The entire proceeds go to relieve these dependents. Poppy day holds all over the nation, and will soon be an expected and familiar event each year.

Week Has Been Feast for Music Lovers

So many public affairs have crowded the week that hostesses have had to forgo entertaining almost entirely to make way for the music studio recitals, school activities and Memorial Day programs that have filled the days.

Two recitals were given by the Helpline Conservatory, and will be followed next week by programs June 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th. Especially interesting in the light of a departure from the usual program will be the out door dance pageant and Boys Band Concert on the Court House lawn, Monday, June 2nd, at 5:30. This is free to the public. On June 5th, the kindergarten will give their annual program at the Antlers Theatre. This has been arranged in the form of a Story Book Ball at the home of the Mother Goose, and will precede the regular moving picture program.

On the evenings of June 2 and 3, Mrs. L. B. Moore will sponsor recitals at the Presbyterian church. Her programs have been arranged to include advance numbers on various instruments, readings and demonstration of modern methods of musical instruction exhibited by the Dunning system of improved music study.

The concert by Gail Currel at the Medford Armory tonight, has drawn a number of Roseburg folk to the southern city. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Fisher went to Medford on Friday and a number motored to Medford this morning, including Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brand, Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Heinline, Miss Elsie Robinson, Jack Shields, Mr. and Mrs. A. N. SENATOR LODGE MAKES A DENIAL

Says He Never Aided in Issue of Liquor Export Permits as Charged.

MAN CAUSES UPROAR

A. L. Fink Told That His "Lies" Were Not Wanted by Committee and He Hurriedly Leaves.

(Associated Press Licensed Wire.)

WASHINGTON, May 31.—Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, the republican senate leader, testified today before the Daugherty committee and made an explicit denial that he had ever aided in the issue of export liquor permits as indicated in recent testimony by Gaston B. Means.

The story told by Means was that a permit in which Senator Lodge interested himself resulted in the export to Canada by Craven Bros. of a consignment of liquor which was later landed by smugglers off Atlantic City. The senator declared however, that he never knew of the existence of Craven Bros.

"I never heard of it," he said. "I never obtained an export permit for anybody."

Committee then heard another volunteer witness, A. L. Fink of Rochester, N. Y., associated with Roxie Stinson and he launched into a series of charges which created a disturbance that had to be quieted by the police.

Fink shouted that he was "the man Frank Vanderlip tried to give against President Coolidge," and that he wanted to tell how Senator Wheeler, the committee prosecutor, "got loose for Roxie Stinson."

"We don't want your lies," chairman Brookhart thundered back at him and Senator Ashurst, democrat, Arizona, the only other committee member present, told Fink he was a crook.

Senator Ashurst promised to "put him out of the chairman will allow," and Fink left the room before Senator Wheeler entered. A moment later, the committee sent for him.

LOVE-OR FAME?

by VIOLET DARE

Author of "The Half-Time Wife"

DOROTHY LANE goes to New York to visit.

PERSIS GRANT, and gets a chance to act in a motion picture as double for a famous star. She meets

LAWRENCE FRENCH, a young publicity agent. A producer whom Persis knows, named HOPSON, invites the girls to go to a theater and dance club with him and some friends.

X—SOME QUESTIONABLE ADVICE

FAY GRANVILLE was at our table when I went back to it, and I was introduced to her and the man with her—a Mr. Myers.

VIOLET DARE

She laughed and talked a lot, and looked around at the people near us, and seemed to be enjoying herself all the time. The three men all paid her a lot of attention, and laughed at even the simplest little things she said. She spoke of all the big stars by their first names, and told all sorts of gossip about them; not very nice gossip, either.

"Corinne Griffith? Oh, of course I know her! Why, she and I—"

And then she told a great long story about Miss Griffith. And then: "Alice Joyce? Oh, dear me, yes, I know Alice awfully well; when she was a telephone girl—"

And on and on she went. I began to wonder if she were jealous of these other girls who had risen to the very top of their profession. It certainly sounded like it to me.

"Mel says that you girls want to go into pictures," she said to me after a while, when the men were talking business. "Had any experience?"

I told her what I'd done, and she shook her head, with a little smile.

"You'll never get anywhere that way, dearie, never. The only thing to do is to get to the top the quick—"

And then she certainly doesn't seem under that class. Why, with the competition there is now—oh, you might as well go back home as to keep on. I tell you, honey, you're darned lucky to have this chance to go in with me; we'll treat you right, and you'll be making a name for yourself the first thing you know."

Well, I knew that I ought to tell her right then that I couldn't do it, but somehow I just didn't dare. I didn't want to blurt it right out, and I couldn't think of any good reason to give. I wished that Lawrence French had been there to help me out, but he had gone on to some dance club; he had told me that he had just come up there with one of the stars of his company, who was in New York for a few days and then would have to go back to California, and that they were doing everything along Broadway. I couldn't help wishing that I was in their party.

I tried not to let anybody know that I wasn't perfectly happy, though, and got along pretty well.

Fay Granville went home alone.

Persis was having the time of her life; she seemed to like Mr. Melville awfully well.

Finally the Roof closed—it was awfully late when it did, too—and then we went on to another place for a little while; a dance club, that was. I was getting terribly tired by that time, and was really glad when Fay Granville pushed back her chair and said "Come on, boys; take the girls home; I'm simply dead, and if I've got to get to work tomorrow I've got to have some sleep."

She went home by herself, which seemed funny to me, but she insisted on it, so the three men took us down to our houses. On the way we stopped at one of the white-front restaurants and had what cakes and coffee; there were lots of other people doing it—ever so many celebrities among them, too. I saw two the girls we'd seen on The Roof—two of the show girls, I mean—in the most gorgeous evening gowns.

There was an old, gray-haired woman scrubbing the floor right around under their feet, and they laughed and joked with her, but I saw one of the men with them slip a bill into the old woman's hand when he got up to leave. I began to see why writers like to live in New York; it seemed to me they'd just find plots all around them.
