LOVE-OR FAME?

by
VIOLET DARE
Author of "The Half-Time Wife"

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED.

DOPOTHY LANE goes to New York to visit
LUDIS GRANT and try to break into the movies. She meets
LAWRENCE FRENCH, a young publicity man, and after a quarrel with Persis, goes to a girl's club with SYLVIA SPEARIN and lives there. Through French she meets JOHN SEWARD, a famous star, who is engaged as a leading lady in a independent production that is a comedy. Seward, known as "the great lover of the screen," falls in love with her. Realizing that she cared more for Lawrence French than for him, she is much upset. Returning from a location trip early one morning, she sees Sylvia and Lawrence driving to the railway station together, and feels sure that they are eloping. But a note from Sylvia explains that she has an engagement with a stock company out of town and is leaving to do it.

XXVII—TWO TELEPHONE CALLS

I WONDERED about so many things, as I stood there at the telephone, waiting for Lawrence French to call me again. I felt fairly sure that he cared a good deal for me. Since I had seen him in the taxi with Sylvia early that morning, I had known that I cared for him. And I admitted to myself that I'd rather have him ask me to marry him than have anything else.

VIOLET DARE

In the world.
Suddenly the phone bell rang. My heart seemed to be thumping in my throat as I answered it.
"Miss Lane?" The voice was not Lawrence's, and for a moment I was too surprised to answer it.
"This is Jack Gibbs, at the Gordon Agency," the voice went on. "You registered here some time ago. I've seen some of that picture you've been making with John Seward, and I've not a carking good part for you. Will you come down and talk it over?"
"Yes, of course—I'll come right away," I answered. I knew that I ought to feel glad over this new turn of events, but somehow I wasn't as happy as I'd have been if the call had been from Lawrence French.
He got me on the wire a moment later.
"Hello, Dada," he cried, and his voice made me feel things all over. "This is Larry French, and I'm crazy to see you right away. How about having dinner together and dancing a bit afterward? I know a place where there's a marvelous view of the harbor—and I know a lot of things I want to tell you."
"Oh, Larry—I want to hear them, too," I told him, wishing my voice wouldn't sound so queer.
He laughed a little at that, and his voice was sort of shaky. I felt pretty sure that he felt just about as I did.

I dashed up the stairs two at a time, and got out every single dress I had and spread them around on the bed. I didn't have very many clothes, because, of course, I hadn't had much money to spend on such things, but mother had sent me all my last summer's things and two new dresses, and while we were working at Port Low I'd bought some more.
New York is an awfully discouraging place in summer, though, if you want to look smart. In winter it's different, because everybody wears coats, and the really beautiful frocks don't show, but in summer, when laundry bills are simply mountain high, it's quite a struggle to look nice.

I had one darling dress, of very thin, dark-blue organdy. It was trimmed with little narrow, white frills, and had a big snub, and it was awfully becoming. But it had to be laundered every time it was worn, if it was to be kept crisp and fresh-looking—if it didn't look perfectly fresh and newly done, it looked like a messy rag—you know those dresses!

The upkeep on that frock was simply ghastly. The French laundry charged me four dollars every time they washed it. The Chinaman at the corner charged me less, but he did it only about third as well, and left the blue part looking streaky. I'd tried doing it myself, in the laundry at the club, and it looked worse than when the Chinaman did it.
Luckily, I sent it to the French place just before I went to Cape Cod, so it looked simply wonderful that afternoon. I couldn't quite decide to wear it, because it was so awfully sweet and simple looking, and I thought, maybe the agent would want me for a rather sophisticated role. I considered if I ought not to wear a checked silk, that I'd bought at a little shop on Broadway, that looked older and more dressed up, and had a hat that matched it.
But the afternoon was pretty warm, and I finally voted for the dark-blue one and white shoes and stockings and a big, floppy hat trimmed with red-velvet and soft white flowers. My dress was wonderful, and I knew I'd look nice, whether I was sophisticated or not.

FAMINE OF YEAST CAKES REPORTED

"West is West, and Yeast is Yeast," to paraphrase the words of a well known poem; but a yeast cake is something different. Slim girls who are eating yeast to get fat, and fat girls who are eating yeast to get thin, and others who are eating yeast because they can't get the glass of beer they need to enjoy daily, have been on short rations since the housewives of the city started practicing for The New Review cooking school. The yeast famine started shortly after the announcement that an electric range was to be given as a prize for the best baked loaf of bread. Most of the stores get their yeast cakes by mail, and it has been a race to see whether those who want yeast cakes as an item of diet, or those who desired them for bread making, got their orders in first. Yesterday the bakers won by a wide margin, and long before the local groceries closed for business last night, the supply of yeast cakes in the city was exhausted.

Some of the housewives took a lesson from the biblical story of the wise and foolish virgins, and got their yeast cakes early. Some of those, however, who failed to provide beforehand, solved the problem by taking the family car and driving to some of the nearby towns, and purchasing yeast cakes, extra sales being reported as far south as Myrtle Creek and as far north as Oakland.

GLENDALE FORMS NEW BOOSTER CLUB

At a meeting held at the Hotel Edison Monday night a community club was organized for the purpose of promoting the natural industrial, agricultural and timber resources, and the civic interests of Southern Douglas county.

Considerable discussion was had over the selection of a name for the new organization and it was finally decided to offer a prize of $2.50 in cash for the best suggestion.

The name must be short (not over three words) and applying to some particular industry or attraction. Grants Pass have their "Cavemen," Roseburg has the "Umpqua Chiefs," but they're not named yet, so get busy and think up a bunch of names—the more the merrier—and one of them may be the prize winner. Submit your list to G. L. Wardrip by Monday evening if possible.

A. A. Snyder was elected president, C. O. Gannett, vice-president, G. L. Wardrip, secretary, and J. A. Dewey, A. G. Clarke, A. Mosier and Chub Harvey, together with the officers will constitute an executive committee.

The annual dues were placed at $2.00 and every business man, farmer, or laborer, who has the best interests of the community at heart is cordially invited to become a member.

A program for community advancement is being formulated and the help of every booster in the neighborhood will be needed to secure the utmost success.—Glendale News.

Yale's junior varsity eight defeated the Harvard junior varsity crew in their two mile race upstream on the Thames river today.

Yale won by one length. When Harvard had taken a slight lead after the start, Harvard carried the lead to nearly the half way flag, when Yale successfully challenged the crimson crew and swept into the lead, which she increased to a full length. Harvard tried vainly to cut the lead down and Yale captured the contest by one length. Both crews finished in good shape.

HARVARD LOSES TO YALE IN REGATTA

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 20.—Yale junior varsity and freshman crews today demonstrated again the power of the western stroke, rowing to victory over Harvard crews over a two mile course on the Thames river in the forenoon events of regatta day.

The freshman crew led the crimson at the finish line by four lengths while the blue junior varsity after a bow-to-bow struggle over most of the course, sprinted down the final half mile stretch to win by little more than a length.

Harvard crews fought a game, if losing battle.
