LOVE-OR FAME?

by VIOLET DARE

Author of "The Half-Time Wife"

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED.

DOROTHY LANE goes to New York to visit

PERDIS GRANT and try to break into the movies. She meets

LAWRENCE FRENCH, a young publicity man, and after a quarrel with PERDIS, goes to a girl's club with SYLVIA STEARNS and lives there. Through French she meets

JOHN SEWARD, a famous star, and is engaged as his leading lady in an independent production that he is making. Seward, known as "the great lover of the screen," falls in love with her. Realizing that she cared more for Lawrence French than for him, she is much upset. Returning from a location trip early one morning, she sees Sylvia and Lawrence driving to the railway station together, and feels sure that they are eloping. But a note from Sylvia explains that she has an engagement with a stock company out of town and is leaving to fill it. An agent phones her, asking her to see him concerning work.

XXVIII—NEW OPPORTUNITIES

I TOOK a taxi to the agent's office; it wasn't really an extravagance, because I wanted to look as fresh and nice as possible when I got there, and I knew that making the trip on a street car or the elevated would make my dress look wilted. So I arrived in style, and went up the stairs to the office right behind a terribly pompous-looking man who had stood in the doorway and stared when I got out of the cab. I put him down as somebody looking for a job and felt rather sorry for him.

I didn't have to wait in the ante-room at all; I felt sorry for all the people who were standing around there, when the office boy came out and said that I was to go right in to Mr. Gibbs' office. And then he turned to the pompous-looking man and said, very respectfully: "Will you come in too, Mr. Elkhorn."

Elkhorn! My knees shook, and I had a wild desire to laugh. I'd set the great Elkhorn down as a man looking for a job, and felt rather annoyed when he stared—Elkhorn, the biggest producer in the motion pictures, save two who stood on a par with him.

Jack Gibbs introduced us, gave me a chair facing the little window that looked down on Broadway, and said:

"Well, this is the young lady, and if you don't say she's just what you want I'll eat my new straw hat!"

Elkhorn didn't answer for a moment; he just sat there and stared at me, and I remembered the way I'd seen farmers look at cattle they were thinking of buying. I felt awfully uncomfortable, and my cheeks burned. The men laughed at that.

"Still young enough to blush!" remarked Elkhorn, patting me on the shoulder. "You're very pretty, dear. How'd you like to work for me?"

If I had been truthful I would have said, "I wouldn't like to at all, but I want to work for somebody, and you're no worse than anyone else." But of course it would never have done to say anything like that, so I just smiled and said:

"Oh, I'd love to, Mr. Elkhorn."

Then he and Gibbs talked a lot, mentioning people I didn't know.

VIOLET DARE

"You're very pretty, dear," he said.

and I turned around and looked down on the street, thinking probably they'd rather feel that I wasn't listening.

Broadway looked awfully hot and uncomfortable, but there were lots of people going to and fro. There were ever so many girls, all painted up and dressed gaily, and men in very exaggerated-looking clothes, and I knew that most of them were motion picture actors, looking for work. I saw one of the girls from the club go by; I knew that she had been out of work for several months, and was simply frantic for something to do; she had nobody to whom she could turn to help her out.

Having my own people behind me always made me feel perfectly safe, somehow. I knew that if ever things got quite impossible, I could go back home and they'd be glad to have me. I think that was one of the reasons I got on so well. Yet sometimes it made me feel rather guilty, too; for instance, I knew how my mother would feel if she could have seen me in that office, with these two men looking me over the way they did.

"Well, we'll take her, then," Elkhorn said at last, rising and putting on his hat—a little detail like keeping it off in the presence of a woman meant nothing to him; he patted me on the shoulder again, "Gibbs will tell you a little more about this; then we'll get together again—at dinner tonight, say—and settle the thing up. I'd do it now, but I haven't time, got an engagement. I think—"

He stopped and looked at me for a moment. "I think you're just exactly what I want!" he finished very significantly, and walked out of the room.

"The Right Thing."

We have sold over ten thousand 49-pound sacks of our Exchange brand flour, and not a single dissatisfied customer. Some record, eh?

Over five hundred thousand pounds of flour, used by all kinds of cooks, and they all liked the flour. You will like it too if you try it once. It is a natural flour, unbleached flour, made from wheat good enough to make a good white flour without artificial bleaching. Buy a sack, mix a batch of bread, allowing for the greater expansion of unbleached flour by leaving the sponge a little softer, and you, too, will be a steady user.

And the price is less than for other flour of similar quality. $1.30 per sack, $7.30 per bbl. Good bleached Hard Wheat Flour, $6.90 per bbl. Good Biscuit Flour $5.30 per bbl.
