

SAVE THE LAWN

...dry weather makes it necessary to be particular in sprinkling and water the shrubbery and flowers. We are offering this

Garden Hose

At SPECIAL DISCOUNT!

...Rubber and Red Line Cotton Garden Hose. These are Quality Products, Western Made.

OUR WINDOW DISPLAY. ALL SORTS OF SPRINKLERS AND HOSE ATTACHMENTS

Churchill Hardware Co.

THE WINCHESTER STORE

MEMORIAL TO BE ERECTED

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, EUGENE, OREGON, June 27.—Assurance has been given by the American Legion office of speedy construction of the memorial on the University of Oregon campus, by Robert Kuykendall, president of the alumni association, chairman of the memorial campaign.

While it will especially honor the men of the state university who died, it will in a larger sense commemorate the sacrifice and service of all men of our state who died and all who served. We want it to be at the very heart and center of the University's life so that, for generations to come, Oregon students will find in it a constant inspiration to self-sacrifice and service.

"The War Memorial court was the first objective of the University alumni, and it will be the first thing constructed with the funds we have raised. We want this to stand always as our tribute to the highest of the ideals that motivate in times of war and are equally valuable in times of peace. Our complete program of buildings which we hope to finance for the University include the memorial court, the library and the men's gymnasium. Our subscriptions already assure the construction of the court and the first unit of the library.

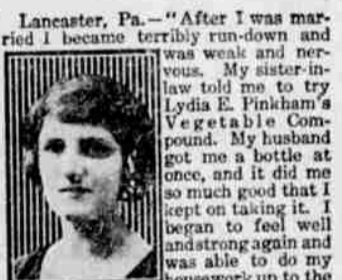

Makers and savers of good complexion. During the summer months use our lemon soap, lemon cream and lemon lotion and keep that fresh, cool complexion. Lloyd Crocker.

FIRECRACKER STARTS FIRE
A grass fire Monday night which evidently started from a fire cracker exploded by some boys near the Tomlinson store south of town, burned over a considerable area of pasture and stubble land before it was finally put out by a large force of men and boys who rushed to the scene at the ringing of the town fire bell. The selling of fire crackers is forbidden by ordinance within the town of Myrtle Creek as a precaution against fire, but the Tomlinson store is outside the town limits and is free from municipal restriction, and if the proprietor chooses to sell fire crackers and endanger the property of the community by so doing, the council is powerless to prevent such sale.

DEPENDENCE CREAMERY
OLD RELIABLE
Roseburg Buying Station at
ROSEBURG POULTRY MARKET
101 No. Jackson St.

RUN-DOWN WEAK, NERVOUS

Benefited by First Bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lancaster, Pa.—"After I was married I became terribly run-down and was weak and nervous. My sister-in-law told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My husband got me a bottle at once, and it did me so much good that I kept on taking it. I began to feel well and strong again and was able to do my housework up to the time my baby was born—a nice fat little girl in the best of health. I surely am recommending the Vegetable Compound to my friends when they have troubles like mine, and I am perfectly willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial."

—Mrs. FRANK H. GILM, 533 Locust Street, Lancaster, Pa.

Women should heed such symptoms as pains, backache, nervousness, a run-down condition and irregularity, as they indicate some form of female trouble.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a dependable medicine for all these troubles. For sale by druggists everywhere.

the Income Stops
Are you Prepared for that emergency?
W. E. FLURRY
Insurance Agency
Rooms 1 and 2
Roseburg Bank Bldg.
Roseburg, Ore.

the Seasons Change
...discarded can be look new again and splendid service. We are now renewing the of the best dressed in community.
Imperial
TRY OUR WAY
Our Auto Will Call

LOVE-OR FAME?

by VIOLET DARE
Author of "The Half-Time Wife"

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

DOROTHY LANE goes to New York to visit

PERISS GRANT and try to break into the movies. She meets

LAWRENCE FRENCH, a young publicity man, and after a quarrel with Periss goes to a girl's club with

SYLVIA STEARNS and lives there. Through French she meets

JOHN SEWARD, a famous star, and is engaged as his leading lady in an independent production that he is making. Seward, known as "the great lover of the screen," falls in love with her. Realizing that she cares more for Lawrence French than for him, she is much upset.

Returning from a location trip early one morning, she sees Sylvia and Lawrence driving to the railway station together, and feels sure that they are eloping. But a note from Sylvia explains that she has an engagement with a stock company out of town and is leaving to fill it. An agent phones her, asking her to see him concerning work. There she meets a movie magnate, EIKHORN, who offers her an engagement, and wants her to dine with him. Having an engagement with French, she refuses. A girl whom French has known a long time is at the hotel where Dorothy dines with him, and jealous of her, Dorothy joins Eikhorn at a nearby table. She leaves the hotel with Eikhorn, but dithering his actions on the way home, jumps out of his car and takes a cab to the club.

I hadn't felt so upset I'd have been amused at the thought that I could forget the fact that John Seward wanted to marry me.

"I saw Jack Gibbs a few moments ago, at the club, and he told me that Henry Eikhorn had just taken you home," he went on, without waiting for me to speak.

"And I—well, I was pretty much worried about you, and couldn't resist calling up to see if you had arrived home. I—well, it's none of my business, I suppose, but I sort of don't like this girlie."

"Well, I'm home," I told him, wondering why I should want to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If

THEATRES

Liberty Theatre.

Something of the speedy action in "In Fast Company," which comes to the Liberty theatre tomorrow and Thursday only, can be imagined from the fact that persons who have seen it call it "a serial in feature length." That is a true description, although it contains none of the hokum which usually prevails in chapter pictures.

Every stunt performed by Richard Talmadge, star of the Truett production, is possible in real life. In other words, the situations are not forced but legitimate. But it is the speed with which the plot moves, and the fact that Talmadge performs so many daring stunts, that caused those who witnessed it to credit it with being a feature length picture with serial value.

But unlike a serial picture, it is crammed full of comedy. Its fast thrills and comedy are so interwoven that absorbing interest starts with the first scene and keeps up to the very finish. All this makes for entertainment of exceptional merit, and entertainment is what the public goes to picture houses to see.

Antlers Theatre

Herbert Rawlinson, star in "Dark Stairways," Universal picture coming to the Antlers theatre Wednesday, severed a long connection with the speaking stage to enter motion pictures. He has appeared in some of the outstanding film successes of the past few years, "High Speed," "Jack O' Clubs," "The Dancing Cheat," "His Mystery Girl," are some of the recent pictures in which he has been starred by Universal. Rawlinson was born and educated in England, and toured the world over, playing in many big legitimate productions.

Ruth Dwyer, who has the leading feminine role in "Dark Stairways," played opposite the star, Herbert Rawlinson, in "Jack O' Clubs," and "His Mystery Girl." She has been in motion pictures for six or seven years, quitting the speaking stage for work before the camera.

LOGANBERRY JUICE

$1.25 per gallon. Containers reserved. Phone 18F2. W. J. Meredith, Looking Glass.

LOCAL NEWS

Eat Hazelwood at Wimberly's.

Arundel, piano tuner. Phone 159-L.

Eat Hazelwood at Wimberly's.

Band concert Sunday at Bandon by the Sea.

Get windows, doors and frames at Pages.

Within 3 hours you can now flivver to Bandon by the Sea.

Fill your coal bin now. Page Lumber & Fuel Company.

Wanted—Dry Cascara bark. We may highest prices. Berger's Cascara Store.

Our guaranteed ranges will give satisfaction and save you money. Hudson's Electric Store.

Cement chimney and foundation blocks—Page Lumber and Fuel company.

Say T-H-O-R, that's the word, save labor and makes washing a pleasure—$10.00 a month. Hudson's Electric Store.

Our list of electric range users is growing. Be one of them, Hudson's Electric Store.

$5.00 down and $5.00 a month places a Royal Vacuum Cleaner in your home. Hudson Electric Store.

I teach health building—swart method for OVERCOMING or PREVENTING disease in young or old. Dr. W. A. Diebold, 321 Perkins Bldg.

We celebrate, July 4, Grants Pass, with parade, baseball game, wild west roundup, fireworks and patriotic program. Fifty cents admission. Entire program free. Basket dinner. Free coffee.

MOSQUITOES
Good for the bites—good to keep the insects off too—

VICKS
VAPORUB

NEW YORK, June 30.—A cable message received here today announced that King George greatly praised the work of Sir Henry Thornton, president of Canadian National Railways. The premiers of the Canadian provinces were received at a garden party at Buckingham Palace, and while questioning the visitors regarding Canadian affairs his majesty expressed very particular pleasure at the success attending the operation of Canadian railways under the direction of Sir Henry Thornton.

"You have taken a good man away from us in England," said the king.

Sir Henry Thornton was born in Indiana, and was associated with British railways and with the allies in the war efforts from the year 1914 until he was called to Canada to head the Dominion's national system.

TODAY'S INSTALLMENT.

XXXVI—JOHN SEWARD TAKES A HAND.

I GOT home tired to death, but too excited to be sleepy.

"Telephone for you, Miss Lane," called the maid from the hall below, as I began to undress, and I simply flew out of the room and down the stairs. It might possibly be Eikhorn, though I did hope it wasn't. I couldn't think of any one else, because it was half past eleven, and I had a father and a mother waiting for me.

I picked up the receiver and spoke, but my voice sort of sank down into my throat, somehow, and I had to say "Hello" twice before I got any answer. And then a cheerful masculine voice said:

"Hello, Dorothy. This is John Seward."

I'd never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."

"Thank Heaven for that! Did you really turn the great Eikhorn down, Dorothy? I'd been considering coming down to the club and camping out on the front porch, to act as watch dog for you, but evidently it isn't necessary," he laughed. "However, don't you think you'd better have luncheon with me tomorrow and talk things over? Come on—meet me at the Astor tomorrow at twelve-thirty, won't you?"

I told him that I would. And as I hung up the receiver I felt suddenly very grateful to him for his kindness, and wished that I cared more for him. I wondered if, perhaps, I might not better marry him anyway—maybe love would come later.

To go back upstairs seemed impossible. So I wrapped my kimono close around me and went out to the porch. My kimono was of very dark silk, and the house stood so far back from the street that there was no chance that any one would see me.

I wondered about Lawrence French. He was angry with me, I knew. Well, I felt angry with him, too. He needn't have been so awfully glad to see that girl, even though she was an old friend. He should have found some excuse as to why we needn't have joined her at her table.

I never thought of him. I'd forgotten him completely ever since Eikhorn mentioned him to me. If cry because somebody wanted to look after me.

"But is it true that you're going to sign up with Eikhorn? Gibbs said you were."

"No, I decided not to—on the way home. I just didn't like the part he offered me."