s the public's principal point
act with this vital industry, a stupendous activity of the public is little aware—an activity which leads to the ends of the earth in a quest for new oil. The public hears much of successes, of wells gushing quantities of "black gold." Of the failures, of the great financial risks, of the great losses which often must be borne, it knows very little.

The world moves on oil, and it is the obligation of those engaged in the industry never to permit the supply to fail. Hence, the unceasing search, which nowadays goes far afield. This company today has drilling parties in Alaska, Colombia, Ecuador, and Argentina, as well as in several states at home, while its geologists are scouring the earth for likely-looking territory.

Having heard reports of favorable surface conditions on the Bondoc Peninsula, the company initiated its own geological survey in 1919. In the spring of 1920 it was recommended that the company should drill, and lands were then acquired. In 1920 there was a shortage of iol on the Pacific coast. California fields did not produce enough to meet the rapidly growing demand. Later, new fields were discovered here, which finally brought a condition of over-production. But in 1920 a great task confronted this company—that of keeping up an unfailing supply of petroleum to meet the requirements of the future. Hence, it was decided to wildcat at Bondoc.

In December, 1920, an expedition sailed from San Francisco for Manila. Everything necessary to life and work had to be shipped from California. The shipment ran to a thousand tons of material. The timber for the rigs, all machinery, road-building apparatus, and even the supply of manila rope were placed aboard and transported across the Pacific, along with a field-hospital equipment. Twenty-five California oil-field workers composed the party.

The field of operations was in a wild, scarcely inhabited region of southern Luzon, well away from civilization, a tropical land of great heat and torrential rain, an area of typhoons, of fetid humidity and lurking disease, of snakes, monkeys and alligators, deer and wild pigs. Men and materials were lightered ashore at the mouth of the Pagsanghan River, and the first camp was built several miles from the sea. There were no roads; the area was covered with head-high pina-grass. Bunk-houses were built—California style and design—and after weeks of labor drilling was begun, and a well called Anuuis No. 1 was "spudded in" on March 20, 1921.

For more than three years the work proceeded, steadily but with climatic interruptions. The rains brought floods; the typhoons were destructive. The first hole went to 1200 feet, and was abandoned on account of mechanical trouble. No oil. The second was drilled to 3750 feet. No oil. The third, the final great effort, went down to a depth of 5120 feet, almost a mile. No oil—and the end.

The failure to find oil at Bondoc does not prove that there is no oil in "the islands." It means that there is none in the area prospected. There is oil to the north, in Japan, and to the south, in Borneo, and it may yet be found in the Philippine group, where there has been only one real drilling campaign—the one just finished.

LOVE-OR FAME?

by

VIOLET DARE

Author of "The Half-Time Wife"

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED.

DOROTHY LANE goes to New York to visit a friend, and try to break into the movies. She soon gets started, and through the friendship of

LAWRENCE FRENCH, a young publicity man, gets an engagement with JOHN SEWARD, "the great lover of the screen," who falls in love with her and asks her to marry him. However, she cares more for French, but is not sure that he cares for her. She has an unfortunate experience with

EIKHORN, one of the big producers, and decides to go back home and give up her career, when French gets her a part in a picture being made in the country by CARL BANNING. French follows her to the country and proposes to her.

XLIII—NEW FRIENDS.

I WAS glad that, since I was to be separated from Larry, I would have the diversion of work to take my mind off him a little, at least. But oh, how I hated to let him go!

We planned our home that evening, and set the date for our wedding — which couldn't be certain yet, of course — and tried to tell ourselves that we didn't mind waiting two months.

VIOLET DARE

"We'll have a little apartment—just four rooms," I told him. "And we'll be awfully economical about furniture. We'll have a nest of little tables in the living room instead of one big, expensive one, and we won't have any dining-room—two bedrooms, and a living-room and a kitchen will be plenty for us. And I shall cook and keep the house clean and everything!"

Larry was perfectly delighted. He hadn't any family, and had been living in rooming houses and hotels for so long that he'd forgotten what a real home looked like.

After he went away I sat in the window of my room, just luxuriating in happiness. Finally I wrote a letter to Sylvia Stearns, telling her about it. Larry had told me that Sylvia had known when she went away; she had asked him, that morning when he took her to the railway station, if he wasn't in love with me, and he'd said he was. And she'd urged him to tell me so right away, and he'd meant to that night when we were dancing together, but the girl he'd known when he was a boy, and Eikhorn, ruined everything between them.

"Nothing can ever separate us now, though, can it?" he'd said when he left me.

"No—nothing ever can," I'd told him. I thought of that now. And the falls roared and roared at me as I remembered our words. They almost seemed to mock me. It frightened me a little, and I hurried into bed and tried not to hear them.

I was awfully interested in meeting the people I was to work with, when they arrived the next day at about eleven o'clock. There was one girl about my age, named Crystal May, who played the lead, and another girl, older, played the adventuress; her name was Janet Powers, and she and her husband, Phil Cabot, as he was known on the screen, were the villains of the picture. The hero was a young man who'd come up very rapidly in pictures that year. He'd been on the stage, made good there and in some light comedies on the screen, and now was playing the lead in this picture. There were two or three character actors too, all men, and that was all.

We set the date for our wedding that evening.

I think I'd have liked Crystal May if she hadn't been so pleased with herself. She was the perfect actress type that used to be so popular; the type with yellow curls and big blue eyes and a pretty, rather empty face. She wasn't empty, though; she was awfully shrewd. And her mother, who traveled with her, worked so hard keeping her young and girlish that from the very first I felt a little bit sorry for her.

Janet Powers was a regular person, and she and I soon formed a very real friendship. She was dark, rather statuesque, and very beautiful, and between her and Crystal May's mother there was a constant battle. It was rather funny, of course, to hear them squabbling, and I couldn't help being amused at them. They'd known each other in the early days of picture making; Janet Powers had been one of the big favorites then, like Clara Kimball Young and Florence Lawrence. But as pictures developed she'd fallen behind; she'd grown older, of course, and she'd had bad luck in signing up with two companies that fell through, and had left the screen for a time.

Her husband, who was a leading man in the old days, had gone on, though. And finally she couldn't stand it any longer, and so came back into pictures. She couldn't be a star any more, but she played big parts and got lots of money, and quite often she and her husband got an engagement together, as they had now.

CALIFORNIA WANTS OREGON CATTLE

CORVALLIS, July 8.—Oregon dairy cattle are in demand to fill large orders from California dairymen and farmers who suffered losses in the recent epidemic of foot and mouth disease that swept more than 50,000 head into the slaughter trenches. California growers are buying cooperatively under the university extension service with W. H. Regan, chief of dairying at the Davis farm, in charge.

Through its director, Paul V. Maris, the extension service has been asked to help locate stock for sale and up to the qualification. The county agents will help owners of such stock get in touch with the California market.

P. M. Brandt, chief of dairying at the c ollege station, has also been asked to lend a hand in locating owners of such stock.

Oregon dairy stock in general is able to measure up to the standards, and the cows in the cow-testing associations show a consistent margin over the requirement of 300 pounds of fat a year per cow. Many of the best Oregon stock has also been tuberculin tested and found to be low in percentage of reactors.

Of nearly 50,000 cows tested by the Oregon veterinary department and the federal bureau of animal industry in cooperation with the extension service, fewer than 1½ per cent reacted. The California demand is for cows t. b. tested in herds under state or federal supervision, and for cows in cow testing associations. If not in supervised herds each animal in the herd must be tuberculin tested and if more than 10 per cent react no animal will be taken from the herd.

Owners reporting stock for this sale are asked to give breed, number of animals in each, average price, and other items called for. High grade Holsteins and Guernseys are sought and probably later good Jerseys. A train load is wanted at first, and later several more will probably be called for.

EUREKA CARAVAN TO MEET COOS CO. FOLKS

EUREKA, Cal., July 9.—(UP)—A caravan conducted under the auspices of the Eureka Chamber of Commerce will leave here by automobile for Marshfield and North Bend Wednesday for the purpose of promoting relations between northern California and southern Oregon and studying the possibilities of developing the country along the route of the Roosevelt highway.

The caravan was decided upon at a meeting here July 1 by Chamber of Commerce officials with members of the advisory board of the state highway commission.

Members of the Arcata Chamber of Commerce also will be with the caravan. The first stop will be made at Crescent City, where the Roosevelt highway will connect with the Redwood highway. On the tenth there will be festivities at Brookins. A clam bake will take place at Port Orford on Friday and a dance Friday night at Bandon. On Saturday the caravan will go on through to Marshfield.

Among those going in the caravan are: Louis Everding, member of the California state highway commission; T. W. Hine, president of the Eureka Chamber, and R. J. Wade, secretary; F. T. Falkenburg, president of the Arcata Chamber of Commerce; A. W. Hill, district attorney of Humboldt county, and several prominent business men.

DIDN'T ARISE EARLY AND PAYS A PENALTY

BEND, July 9.—(UP)—Mrs. W. O. Belmont didn't arise early this morning, but she did leave her bed just in time to avoid being crushed by a boulder which was dropped through the roof by a dynamite blast on nearby street work. The rock tore its way through the shingles and ceiling just an instant after Mrs. Belmont left the room.

RAPP BROTHERS GARAGE

ORITUARY

Wayne Joseph Boyle was born May 2nd, 1857, died July 3rd, 1924.

At an early age he gave his heart to Jesus. He loved the pure and holy. He spent much of his time among his beloved mountains and fields and flowers. He met his God, leaving his loved ones. These comforting words, "All is well." He leaves to mourn his loss, his mother, four brothers, and two sisters. Also many relatives and friends. We'll surely meet him in Heaven.

At the outbreak of the World War Wayne enlisted in the 125th Aero Squadron.

In crossing the ocean his command was driven into an English port by submarines where the command went into training. While there the Aero squadron was detailed to assemble British wrecked planes. Upon one of the planes Wayne met with an accident which broke both of his hands. After a long illness in the hospital in England he was sent home and discharged at Camp Lewis, Wash., after serving about two and one half years.
