CAL COOLIDGE, JR. FUNERAL IS HELD

not know something of the divine in men. One cannot watch the growth of such a spirit at home, in the school, in the church without being led into the presence of God; and if Calvin Coolidge, Jr., has helped us to move on a little closer to the eternal father, what then? Then must the meaning of this life closed so early, appear; then must there come consolations from that father; then must the heavy yoke of trouble be lifted and the old work taken up heroically again. This life leads us to God; and our God can satisfy all our needs. May He bless you and keep you and be gracious unto you. May He give you abundantly of his resources of wisdom and power. May He turn your grief into hope, and your sorrow into a bulwark of strength for the life of our land."

This city, nestled under the shadow of Mount Tom, halted business and traffic for its last tribute to the president's son.

President and Mrs. Coolidge with their surviving son, John, left the train shortly after arriving and went to the Coolidge home. There they were met by Colonel John C. Coolidge, father of the president, and Mrs. Andrew Goodhue, mother of Mrs. Coolidge.

Colonel Coolidge had come from his home at Plymouth, Vermont, and both he and Mrs. Goodhue will accompany the presidential party to Plymouth, where Calvin, Jr., will be buried later in the day. It was also planned by the president to have his father return with the family to the White House.

The casket under a new cover of fresh pink roses, placed there this morning, remained in the compartment at the rear of the president's coach, the last of the special train, until shortly before time for the services, when the funeral procession accompanied it from the station.

Church bells tolled as the funeral party arrived.

All of the president's immediate family rested comfortably on the all-night trip. Five minutes after arrival, Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, dressed in deep mourning, with John, left their coach to go to the old home.

Silent groups gathered along the railroad tracks and stood with heads uncovered as the train came up the Connecticut valley into Massachusetts.

Factories stopped work and employees stood at attention.

North Ampton was unusually quiet. The president had urged that the services here be simple and the home folk sought to comply. Business was stopped while the funeral procession and the services were under way.

In the old home where President and Mrs. Coolidge made their only visit here, Calvin, Jr., was born. The home is one half of a double house structure, typical of the simplicity of the family.

The clear notes of the Smith College chimes were heard throughout the city during the funeral services.

"Onward Christian Soldiers," and "The Son of God Goes Forth to War," were among the hymns played on them.

William M. Butler, chairman of the republican national committee and close friend of the president met the party here and President Marion Le Roy Burton of the University of Michigan, former president of Smith College, who nominated Mr. Coolidge at the recent republican national convention were among those present at the services.

The same six marines who stood guard over the bier through the night as the train moved north, bore the casket to the waiting hearse and then marched beside it as the funeral procession moved slowly through town. Silent townsfolk were uncovered as the procession approached, lining Main street from the station to the ivy-covered brick church.

Just as the funeral procession reached the church the clock on the nearby first church tower tolled the hour of ten.

The funeral train left here for Ludlow, Vt., at 10:30 a. m. (standard time.) From Ludlow the party will proceed by automobile to Plymouth where simple funeral services will be held at the grave in the cemetery on the hill where Coolidge have been buried for four generations.

ON BOARD PRESIDENT COOLIDGE FUNERAL TRAIN, NEW YORK, July 10.—Anxious to offer their respects, American citizens in the cities between Washington and New York lined the route of the presidential train carrying President Coolidge and his family with the body of Calvin, Jr., as the special sped through the late hours last night and early today along the Atlantic coast.

Leaving the capital last night at 9 o'clock after the funeral services at the White House late in the afternoon the special train this morning reached North Ampton, Mass. There at the boyhood home of 16 year old Calvin, funeral services will be held in the church he joined while a boy in the grade school. Late this afternoon the body will be taken on the same train to Ludlow, Vermont, and from there by carriage to Plymouth, Vermont, where the remains will be buried beside the mother of President Coolidge.

The president and Mrs. Coolidge and John, older brother, and lifelong companion of Calvin, bore their grief quietly and with pilgrim fortitude yesterday at the White House services and again last night as they went through the streets of Washington, lined with silent crowds, to the train. For a while after the train left Washington, they sat up, but shortly after passing through Baltimore they retired.

In the same car with them were Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Stearns, of Boston, friends of the family for many years, and Major James F. Connel, the president's physician, at the rear of the car occupied by the family. The last on the train was the bier on which rested the casket with the body of the boy. It was guarded throughout the trip by three marines of the squad of six from the presidential yacht, the Mayflower, pals of the youth on his happy trips aboard the vessel. The gray casket was covered by a spray of pink roses and the lighted compartment was visible to those without.

LUDLOW, Vt., July 10.—The body of Calvin Coolidge, Jr., was brought back to the hills he loved for burial with his forefathers at Plymouth, Vt., today. The funeral train arrived here at 1:27 p. m. (eastern standard time.) The mourners, headed by President and Mrs. Coolidge, left immediately by motor for Plymouth with the bier under military escort.

MAKES SUGGESTIONS FOR CHAMBER WORK

Some time ago the Roseburg Chamber of Commerce sent out a questionnaire asking for suggestions on work which should be undertaken for the benefit of Roseburg and Douglas county. In answer a large number of suggestions were received. A letter from a man deeply interested in the success of the Roseburg organization has been received and a great deal of interesting matter is contained. The letter says:

"Following are my suggestions, in response to your inquiry attached, as to what I think the Roseburg Chamber of Commerce should do in connection with program of work being outlined by them:

"First. Develop a spirit whereby every member will recognize his duty to the Chamber and that they will pledge unyielding support to the Chamber and its officers. Every member to co-operate with each other and to simply and collectively strive for harmony and unity, remembering that in unity there is strength, look to and prepare for the future, the past is dead—forget it.

Second. Every member to always see to it that his neighbor and friends, if they are not members, are informed of the good work being done for the community by the Chamber of Commerce, and where general programs are involved, I believe discussions of members with their neighbors and friends who are not members, would be a good plan, in that it enables one to observe the sentiment, so to speak, of the general public.

"Every member should defend the Chamber's actions, deprecating mistakes no longer as they are honest ones. No one is perfect, neither can the Chamber, like human beings, progress if errors are not at some time made, and particularly when policies and actions of the Chamber of Commerce must on many questions be determined from the best of greatly diverse minds. Loyal members will, and others should, after they have had their say, bow to the will of the majority, or what the Chamber's Officers finally determine is best. Work and support the conclusions.

Third. Every member should realize that he is expected to, and should work to help the Chamber, as in doing so, he is not only helping himself, but the community in general. Members who only passively engage in and support the Chamber's activities, should in justice and credit to those members who are active, refrain from unjust criticism. Members who do not actively work for the Chamber, but assume a double burden. Playing the game from the side lines is a fine pastime, but not productive of results. Criticism and oppose if you will, but let your efforts be constructive and by all means offer your suggestions at the Chamber meetings and not on the sidewalk or around the corner. All should strive to build. Tearing down is the easiest and most harmful thing known.

"Fourth. Every individual in the community should get together and boost intelligently for the Umpqua Valley, whose success is dependent entirely on you. Neither can succeed independently of the other. No one should fear the past. Should errors have occurred, you should so shape affairs that they will represent a profit for the future.

"Fifth. In my judgment one of the greatest needs of the Umpqua Valley is a closer community spirit. Differences undoubtedly will be encountered, and the word is common, 'it cannot be done.' However, let Roseburg lead the way and let's try and bring it about. At first, a small committee, of say, three members from the directorate of each of the Chambers of Commerce, Commercial Clubs or Community Clubs of Roseburg, Sutherlin, Oakland, Myrtle Creek, Riddle, etc. should be gotten together. Certainly there are members big and broad enough in those communities to recognize the need for collective effort. If necessary, the members of such committees need not be confined to any particular organization. I believe the work can be undertaken in a quiet way and by alternate visits and meetings in the different communities, that good results can be obtained. At first the only work that can be undertaken, is the pooling of ideas and suggestions of what are the needs and ambitions of each community, gift them down, see how many will suit the interests of the entire valley and make them a basis for collective effort. Further sifting of suggestions applicable to particular localities can be made and by a slow but sure process of elimination or adoption, feel sure that many differences will be found to be largely imaginary. Later 'the constructive effort should develop into a condition whereby all organizations can get together on at least the larger propositions affecting the valley. A fair basis of organization will be recognition of the fact that nothing can happen in the district but it either benefits or works injury to all.

"Each community should, of course, handle its own affairs, and work along these lines in the past has possibly failed because of the idea gained at the outset of an effort by one organization or community to over-shadow the other.

"In closing, permit me to state I am glad to note from the opening question of your form attached, that the work you are undertaking is not only for the good of Rose-

LISTEN TONIGHT

The man who tries to prevent his neighbor from hearing the truth is an enemy to his God and his country.
