ROSEBURG, OREGON, MONDAY, JULY 14, 1924. SIMPLIFICATION OF INDUSTRY.

It is announced that the lumber industry, through a process of simplification and standardization of its products, is going to be able to reduce the several items of its production by 60 per cent. It is declared that the result will be to save the enormous sum of $250,000,000 a year. No doubt other industries can do the same thing to some extent.

An authority on the lumber industry says that no living man will see the output fall below 20,000,000,000 ft. annually. He predicts that the units of lumber production will become somewhat smaller in time if the example of Europe is a precedent for us but says that the total volume of production, the capital invested and the number of employes will always rank high among our industries.

It used to be: "He who hesitates is lost." Now, "He who hesitates at grade crossings is safe," says David R. Faries, general counsel for the Automobile Club of Southern California. The old proverb that "he who hesitates is lost" doesn't apply to motorists on this side of a railroad crossing.

This is really vacation period. If you had doubts to the contrary, they should now be dispelled. Seven prisoners in the county jail left their abode early Sunday morning—their destination unknown. At last accounts they were traveling by the modern method, a la automobile, and in order to get away from the sweltering weather in this neck of the woods, quite likely are "hitting her up" at no slow pace.

Roseburg had a touch of real coast weather today. It is sure delightful—as far as it went.

- Don't tell your girl you dont like her dress; Don't say she's like her father if he's plain; Don't knock her hair down with a rough caress; And say you'll help her do it up again; Don't keep her waiting if you've asked her out; For if you do excuses will not save you; Don't lose your temper or your head and shout; And don't, above all, lose the gifts she gave you.

FOR HER

- Don't tell your beau he's not as tall as you; Don't keep him standing in the cold and wet; Don't greet excuses with "That can't be true"; Or fix a time for lunch—and then forget; Don't say some other man is "simply sweet"; Don't give commands to ace if he'll obey them; Don't run down every other girl you meet; And if you've got thick ankles—don't display them.—G. Cave-Man Hubby Beats Girl-Wife In Fastness of Great Out of Doors Dan Cupid Saves Him From Hanging

Back in the foothills not far from the state trout hatchery last week was enacted a little drama which rivals the old escapades of men of the so-called harder times.

According to stories being told around the Glide district and at Idillyd park, a young couple drove into the timbered section past the Oregon hatchery a few days ago in a large car bearing a California license. They were married people, but very young in appearance. Especially did the bride seem in the more tender years.

They had come for a good camping trip in the "great out-of-doors" they told the residents of the vicinity of whom they purchased supplies for camping, and they intended having a splendid time.

They drove their machine to the furthest point possible on the road and pitched their camp in a shady spot, which seemed ideal for the purpose.

For a couple of days the young couple seemed to revel in the beauty of nature, throwing care to the wind and laughing with all creation.

On the third day some person, either an employe at the hatchery or a resident of the Rock Creek vicinity, heard someone screaming for help in the woods near the camp, which at the time was apparently deserted. Shouting to his companions to follow, the man plunged into the woods and arrived upon a most pitiable scene.

Evidently asserting his brute mastery over his mate the young man who had seemed so loving was administering a most vigorous horse-whipping, raising screams of pain which became less and less audible as the woman weakened.

American "he-men" are not all employed by the movie companies, and when the rescuers comprehended the nature of the affray and the seeming unfairness of it, they very promptly and unceremoniously captured the "brute-man" and told him in no uncertain terms the respective opinions each had for such a coward and "yellow liver."

With a ferocious tongue lashing growing more and more vicious and abusing as it continued, the irate "stone-age" Dempsey was told to cease his ramblings, or more accurately quoting the now-enraged captors to "shut your (censored) mouth."

But discretion seemed to have no place in the mind of the would-be Tarzan and he continued to affirm that this was a free country and that he had no desire of being interfered with.

Popular rumor has it that the events which transpired from then on would make Zane Grey quit his latest novel in the middle and hasten immediately to the scene to gather local color.

Harking back to the days of the old vigilantes, it seems that the men hit upon the very opportune idea of staging a necktie party for hubby, thereby illustrating concretely to him that such a thing as human justice is not a thing yet extinct.

Woodsmen are known to be as quick in action as in thought and no sooner had the idea been suggested than it was agreed upon by the itinerant judge, jury and counsel for the defense and prosecution as a most timely proceeding.

The rope was procured at the expense of the state. A tree of proper dimensions was selected to share the honor of the day and all was set in readiness for the little private hanging.

Fate was playing into the hands of men of spirit, who saw only justice in the act which they were about to commit and relief for the poor little girl-wife who had now begun to take in the details of what was going on.

But, as the novelists are prone to say, love triumphed!

The case was appealed to the higher court and Dan Cupid, slightly puzzled, but smiling withal at the "sameness" of love, was called to sit upon the bench.

The young wife jumped from the ground where she had fallen and with both arms around the neck of her husband, pleaded with all her heart that no harm be done. She grew hysterical when her audience seemed undecided and would have done material damage to the brawny men had she the power to do so.

Of course, the men gave in. There was nothing else left to do. Hubby was not hanged and the rescuers say "justice once more was cheated."

Hubby and wife have departed for parts unknown following imperative instructions concerning such action, but they leave behind a group of puzzling men whose only expression which seems to rise to the occasion and fit perfectly is: "Well, I'll be damned!"

CALIFORNIA LAND LAW IN COURTS

Legality of Law Prohibiting Aliens From Working Land Is Question.

CASES ARE ADVANCED

Agreement Reached to Speed Up Cases That Under-standing May Be Had Before Harvest.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 14.—(United Press.)—Through test of all phases of the California law prohibiting aliens ineligible to citizenship working land on shares or in any manner profiting from the soil under contract arrangement will be made before the state supreme court in Los Angeles starting July 22.

The purpose of the suits is to forestall scores of small suits which might be expected to be filed in the superior courts of the state when the law is fully enforced when the next cropping season opens. The suits will clear up all uncertainty in regard to the law and allow land owners as well as aliens to know exactly where they stand.

Agreement to bring the suits to trial within a short period before the special session of the supreme court was made here in a conference attended by justices of the high court, State Attorney General U. S. Webb, and his staff, and attorneys representing land owners and aliens who will come under provisions of the law. Three of the suits are appeals, the fourth an initial hearing. The first case is an appeal by Yoshitaro Mitsuno, an alien Japanese, from the Los Angeles county superior court decision in favor of the state which involves the right of the legislature to amend the initiative land law specifically forbidding aliens entering into contracts to sow, tend and harvest crops.

The second case is an appeal from Imperial county involving a cropping bonus contract between George A. Carter, a citizen and land owner, and Hakam Singh, an alien Hindu, by which Singh was to get 80 per cent of the sale price of the crop.

The third case is an initial hearing on a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to determine the validity of the penalty sections of the law. The Japanese alien client of a Los Angeles attorney is to be arraigned under the punitive section, and the legality of the arrest will be tested. This suit is technical, but is expected to bring out some of the strongest evidence for and against the legality of the law.

The fourth case is another actual appeal by Taker Makimoto, an alien Japanese, from the Los Angeles county superior court. It also involves the validity of the bonus crop contract. The contention of state authorities is that the bonus contract is a loophole through which aliens are attempting to evade the penalties attached to violating the established cropping contract procedure.

Following decisions of the United States supreme court which hold the alien land law and the cropping contract laws valid and constitutional, enforcement was at once agreed upon by state authorities. A conference of district attorneys was called, at which it was agreed in substance, that a reasonable opportunity would be allowed both land owners and aliens to "get together" in an understanding of the law, and familiarize themselves with its provisions.

Many aliens pulled up stakes and left the state at about this time, others returned to Japan, but many more elected to stay on the ground and by various means seek to evade the law. Still others elected to form societies for the employment of legal talent and fight enforcement.

The supreme court hearings and subsequent decisions are expected to bring this legal hockeys to an end and establish enforcement on a sound footing. The hearings are expected to be tedious and detailed, but will be expedited as much as possible so that a draft of enforcement regulations may be drawn and placed in the hands of all district attorneys in sufficient time to prevent confusion before the next harvest.
