McWilliams of the Morrison hotel gave him. "They look like them," said Minko.

The glasses were offered in evidence.

Paul Korff who discovered Leopold's spectacles near the drain pipe, told of being hailed by Minko.

"We made arrangements to move the body," said Korff. "I noticed it was naked and looked around for clothes."

"I saw two wounds in the head and the face was kind of blue," Mr. Crowe brought out that the body had been pushed head first into the culvert.

Anthony Szaszpanek, a Chicago patrolman, told of encountering the hand car piloted by Korff with its gruesome body and of learning the men had found it about a mile down the track.

Korff gave the patrolman the spectacles, the witness said he identified them and told of placing the glasses on the body after it had been taken to the undertaking room of Stanley Olejzkoak.

Olejzkoak then took the stand. He remembered the arrival of the body and its subsequent identification by Edwin Gresham uncle of the Franks boy.

The undertaker was shown the horn-rimmed spectacles and said they looked very much like the ones Szaszpanek put on the body.

Mr. Crowe explained he wished chemists to examine the foot boards from the death car for blood stains and a recess of 15 minutes was ordered.

operative Prune Growers, three million pounds; Dallas Cooperative Prune Growers, two million pounds.

That there was now in process of formation an organization at Salem, one in the eastern part of Marion county and one in Lane county.

Mr. Taylor stated that a meeting of the Exchange had been called to meet in Portland on July 28th at which time a permanent organization would be completed. The Exchange will take over the sales organization of the Oregon Growers Cooperative Association, as well as the sales organization of the various units affiliating with the exchange. Mr. Taylor stated that the combined sales outlet under normal conditions could easily dispose of from thirty to forty million pounds of prunes, and that the Exchange was very anxious to have Douglas county growers organize in time to participate in the meeting on the 28th.

Other speakers who spoke favorably of the organization were Attorney Geo. Neuner, Jr., of Roseburg and R. A. Hercher of Dillard. It was the consensus of opinion of those present that an organization would be completed next Friday, and that plants owned by the Oregon Growers Cooperative Association at Myrtle Creek and Riddle would either be purchased or leased for another year.

LEOPOLD AND LOEB PROVED OWNERS OF BLOODY IMPLEMENTS

statement he had indicated was "not fit for the public."

Clarence S. Darrow and Benjamin Bachrach, defense attorneys, were the only persons besides the judge who were given this material.

Rain outdoors and the prospect of less dramatic developments in the hearing which is to determine the degree of punishment of Nathan Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb for the kidnapping and murder of Robert Franks, combined today to dampen enthusiasm of court fans.

Guards which kept the curious on the sidewalks and the knowledge that only a few could gain admission to Judge John R. Caverly's court contributed to this result.

Only a knot of curious people stood about the building at the entrance and they were mostly young men.

Spectators with passes admitting them to the trial came to court early, however, picked their seats quickly and assumed the posture of interest that marks the court follower. They feasted their early curiosity in the doling of the newspaper writers and photographers.

Robert E. Crowe, state's attorney, came into court smoking a big cigar whose aroma was noticeable at some distance.

The state's attorney re-grouped his assistants and alternists, bringing Dr. Wm. Krome to the front and facing him so he could watch every fleeting expression of the defendants.

The steel cabinet full of exhibits was brought in the room by three husky balliffs.

Nathan Leopold, Sr., accompanied by the defendant's elder brother and Jacob Loeb, uncle of "Dickie" arrived a few minutes before court was due to open.

Judge Caverly delayed his appearance from his chambers and it was 10 minutes after the scheduled hour before the clerks ravel fell.

A conference of attorneys with the judge caused the delay. Leopold and Loeb smiled greetings to their relatives as they entered.

Andrew Russo, of 231 East 51 Street, New York, was called as the first witness. Mr. Crowe explaining that he wished to return east.

Russo an electrician, formerly employed in railroad yards there, told of finding in a telegram blank rack on a Pullman car, last May 31, a letter addressed to Jacob Franks, father of the victim of Leopold and Loeb.

The envelope directed the finder to "Leave this alone, it is very important."

The letter contained instructions on how the father was to throw from a moving train the $10,000 ransom demanded by the kidnapers.

"After the train passes a large red brick factory, count five and throw the money east as far as you can," said the letter.

The missive never reached Franks, for Russo turned it in, and the Pullman company sent it to the police.

David Barish, who testified yesterday that Loeb was in his delicatessen store May 9, when "Morton D. Ballard" impersonated by Leopold, was hiring a car for the first trip of that fictitious personage, was recalled.

He said the telephone number of his place was Calumet 4658, the number given by "Ballard," as that of his reference "Louis Mason."

Frank B. Tuttle, clerk in the Trevelyan Hotel, not far from the residential district in which is located the homes of the defendants was asked to identify mail addressed to Morton D. Ballard.

On cross-examination the defense counsel directed attention to the statement of the witness that he handed letters sealed to detectives from the state's attorney and that he was incompetent to testify as to the contents of the envelope.

The point made in the cross examination forced the state to call George Homer, detective, who opened the envelope after receiving it from Tuttle at the hotel.

Homer identified the contents of the envelope which were cards and identification matter from the automobile renting agency where the death car was secured.

Homer also told of arresting Richard Loeb and taking him to the La Salle hotel for preliminary questioning by the state's attorney after Leopold's glasses had been found in the marsh near the railroad culvert which gave up Franks' body. This was the day before decoration day, he said.

Dr. Emil Deutsch, oculist, was called to identify the glasses found in the marsh as those prescribed by himself for Leopold. "A minor degree of astigmatism" was given as Leopold's eye trouble.

Thomas McWilliams, manager of the Morrison hotel, where Loeb registered as "Morton D. Ballard," testified to turning over to the Chicago police a letter from the renting agency addressed to "Ballard" and placed on his desk by employees of the hotel.

He had not opened the letter and Mr. Crowe therefore, sent for Mr. Morgan Collins, Superintendent of Chicago's police department to whom McWilliams delivered the envelope.

Elizabeth Sattler, a maid at the Leopold home identified the defendant and then was shown the wreck of the portable writing machine fished from the lagoon.

Miss Sattler agreed with Mr. Crowe that the wreck resembled the machine of the same type owned by Leopold. She was shown the charred remnants of an automobile robe recovered by the police from the lake shore where the defendants said they had put fire to it after saturating it with gasoline.

She said the robe resembled one she had seen in the Leopold home.

On cross-examination Miss Sattler said her testimony today was the same as before the grand jury.

Arnold Blumenthal, a law student with Leopold at the University of Chicago told of perhaps a dozen visits to the Leopold home to prepare his lessons with Nathan, Jr. He told of having seen the two portable typewriters in Nathan's home. He identified a state exhibit as a typewriter "similar" to the one he had seen in his chum's room.

Another student of the university, Howard O'Bendorf, said he knew Leopold and had visited his home to study with him.

He did not know what make of a portable machine Leopold used. Asked to identify the wrecked Underwood machine and a Hammond also taken from the Leopold home, O'Bendorf replied: "All portables look alike to me."

Maurice Shamberg had seen two portable machines in Leopold's room. One he knew to be a Hammond. He could not identify the state's exhibit from the park lagoon, he said, as the one he had seen in his classmate's home.

Lucille and Jeanette Smith, mother and daughter, living in the neighborhood in which young Franks' body was found, told of having seen a large black touring car "on the dirt road" near their home on the night of May 21, the date Franks was killed. The machine was headed for the city, they said. The side curtains were drawn and the headlights glaring.

Miss Smith said the machine passed them 11 blocks from the culvert.

Proceedings were suspended while Judge Caverly, as chief justice of the criminal court, received a grand jury report.

Bernard Hunt, a night watchman, said that at 10:20 a. m. of May 22, a "maroon car with red disk wheels and bright metal headlights" passed him as he was standing at 45th street and Greenwood Avenue.

"What happened?" asked Mr. Crowe.

"As the car slowed for the turn a man in a rear seat raised up and threw out a chisel."

"What did you do?"

"I walked over to where the chisel hit and picked it up. It was a cold chisel, wrapped with tape. It had freshly dried blood on it."

Morgan Collins, chief of police,

Leob with the death of Franks. "They look like them," said Minko.

The glasses were offered in evidence.

Paul Korff who discovered Leopold's spectacles near the drain pipe, told of being hailed by Minko.

"We made arrangements to move the body," said Korff. "I noticed it was naked and looked around for clothes."

"I saw two wounds in the head and the face was kind of blue," Mr. Crowe brought out that the body had been pushed head first into the culvert.

Anthony Szaszpanek, a Chicago patrolman, told of encountering the hand car piloted by Korff with its gruesome body and of learning the men had found it about a mile down the track.

Korff gave the patrolman the spectacles, the witness said he identified them and told of placing the glasses on the body after it had been taken to the undertaking room of Stanley Olejzkoak.

Olejzkoak then took the stand. He remembered the arrival of the body and its subsequent identification by Edwin Gresham uncle of the Franks boy.

BLAYLOCK AND HELBIG FINED

The charge of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor placed against J. A. Blaylock and V. V. Helbig the first of this week, was dismissed today, and each was fined $50 on a new charge of reckless driving. The two men were arrested by the night officer early Sunday morning, and he claimed that he took two pint bottles of moonshine from them. The moonshine, which he said he placed in the recorder's office, was stolen, and without evidence the city was unable to press its charge of unlawful possession, but did place a charge of reckless driving to which pleas of guilty were entered and the fines paid.
