W. C. T. U. MEETING HELD YESTERDAY

Douglas County Shown to Be One of the Leaders in the State From Standpoint of Enforcement.

The Douglas County W. C. T. U. held an executive meeting yesterday at the home of the county president, Mrs. Marsters. Mrs. J. McAllister, state vice president of the organization was present and gave some interesting information concerning the work of the different departments, and gave the 1923 data concerning the enforcement of the prohibition law showing Douglas county to be fortunate in the conviction of violation cases. Some of the counties have more convictions than others, some the fines are larger.

Arrests	Convictions	Fines
Douglas	48	$1791
Gilliam	13	2199
Josephine	16	1500
Lincoln	6	600
Sherman	11	1180
Union	30	$883.45
Wasco	40	2000
Wheeler	15	1286
Benton	15	2285
Clatsop	71	$375
Clackamas	52	$352.50
Curry	13	1700
Umatilla	62	4842
Lane	63	2565
Gasco	150	10,350
Crook	12	$79.80
Jackson	23	5,069
Multnomah	231	22,571.90

This partial list gives information that is very valuable in the work of enforcement as 75 per cent is kept in the county for future enforcement of this law and 25 per cent is in a state fund for enforcement. $163,250.77 was collected in fines.

Petitions were taken by the committee to be circulated for signers, for a better condition in the county jail, for the employment of a matron when women are confined there and for running water in the woman's department.

New stationery is to be printed, and a county executive meeting to be held once a month, the committee going to the different unions for these meetings. The second Tuesday being chosen in each month.

Mrs. McAllister will visit the unions in the county and help with the organization of new unions. Mrs. Ida Wood of Myrtle Creek was president of the union there was present, accompanied by Mrs. C. C. March, superintendent of Child Welfare and Mrs. Kimmell, of the Christian citizenship department. Mrs. Tuthill, vice president of the county from Sutherlin; Mrs. McGhee, president of Glengary, accompanied by Mrs. John Betts, of the anti-narcotic department; Mrs. R. A. Busenbark, superintendent of the flower mission department of Melrose; Mrs. W. C. Anderson, superintendent of Americanization; Mrs. Shuey, of the Children's Farm Home department; Mrs. Victor Short, recording secretary; Mrs. Davis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. McWhirter of Indiana. Mrs. Marsters presided at the meeting and Mrs. McAllister had charge of the devotions. A number of the women went to the jail to see the conditions existing there. Mrs. V. C. Micelli, county treasurer, was also present.

Mrs. J. J. McAllister was the inspiration for a tea following the county W. C. T. U. meeting at the home of Mrs. A. C. Marsters on Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. McWhirter, Miss Leona Marsters and Miss Mary Ostrom assisted with service. A very artistic centerpiece of gladioli gave a charming dash of color to the tea table.

BLAZE DESTROYS PORTLAND SCHOOL

PORTLAND, Aug. 6.—Fire broke out early this morning in the old Chapman school here and caused an estimated damage of $15,000, covered by insurance. The school was no longer in active use since it had been considered a fire hazard.

The origin of the fire is unknown.

SECRETARY IS MARRIED

SALEM, Aug. 6.—Miss Marie Schwab, who for 11 years has been secretary of the state department of education, was married here last night to J. W. Chambers. Mrs. Chambers will be succeeded in her state house position by Miss Beatrice Walton of Salem.

The Luxury of Love

by VIOLET DARE
AUTHOR OF "The Half-Time Wife," "Love or Fame?" ETC.

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED

MARY HAYWARD, a famous beauty, arrives at the country home.

CAMILLA WAITE with two men, BRUCE GILLIAN and STEWART O'BRIEN. Camilla warns Mary that she is in love with Bruce and that there is no peaching on her matrimonial preserves. Camilla realizes that Bruce is much interested in Mary. Camilla plots with O'Brien to prevent his proposing to her.

VI-CAMILLA'S LITTLE PLAN.

BRUCE GILLIAN'S eyes hardly left Mary's face during dinner that evening. Camilla chattered at him almost unconsciously, and he listened politely enough, but always his eyes were for Mary. She was very pale, an ivory-like pallor, and her gray eyes were dark and wide with the suffering that held her even as she smiled at O'Brien's remarks.

VIOLET DARE

She forced herself not to look at Bruce. It seemed to her that if she met his eyes even once, she must run to his side and tell him what Camilla had said, begging him to reassure her, to tell her that he had meant what he had said, and had not thought that she was trying to make love to him.

Camilla could not fail to note Bruce's interest. Her lips shut in a thin, tight line, and she promptly changed her plans for the evening. There were four tall candles on the table; two of them framed the girl's face, and behind her the deep blue of the early evening sky stretched, making her doubly beautiful. They were dining on the terrace, and the air was heavy with the scent of honeysuckle and roses. A night made for love—and these two who knew their love even though they had not openly confessed must sit facing each other, bound by convention to be "simply polite to the other." Gillian sighed, clenching his hands beneath the table. Never had he seen anything like Mary Hayward, and he vowed in that moment that he would ask her that evening to marry him if he had to do it in front of Camilla, O'Brien and the entire household of servants.

"After all, I don't believe that I want to play mah-jong tonight," remarked Camilla as they rose, quite characteristically, she did not consult the preferences of the others. "I think we'll go to the club and dance awhile. How about it?" And she smiled up at Bruce.

"It sounds attractive," he answered, but his heart leaped. He could dance with Mary, could talk with her in semi-privacy at least, and perhaps steal her away from the crowd for a few moments. Camilla was making plans of her own, however, as Mary went upstairs to get her evening dress.

"The going to ask you to do something for me, something that will give me a real thrill," she told him, crowding her. "I love to shock the crowd here; they're all old friends of mine, and they've begun to take me too much for granted. So let's just dance with each other. I think it would be loads of fun, and all Westchester and Long Island will

Mary stepped out on the balcony.

His eyes denied it, and she turned away, comforted. But the evening almost broke her heart. Only when Bruce danced with her, the second time, was she happy. New as was her love for him, it seemed to her that it was as old as time; his arm seemed to belong around her waist. Yet he did not dance with her again, but always with Camilla.

It was late when they got home; late, still when Camilla brought her confidences to an end and went to her own room. Mary stood by the window for a moment, looking out into the night, then stepped out on the balcony. In her black negligee she seemed a part of it. The air was heavy with fragrance, and she could hear the waves on the beach. She longed to get away from the house, into a silence where she could feel that she was alone with the great new force that had caught her in its grasp. Only a moment she hesitated; then she stole down through the house and out into the garden.

It was quiet there, among the flowers, and she could forget Camilla and her double-edged remarks, forget O'Brien and his insinuations and remember the man who had seemed to care for her when he had said, "I wish for you." So clearly did his voice sound in her ears that she thought she must still be imagining it when she heard him speak just behind her.

"Out for a nightcap?" he asked. She stood for a moment, almost dizzy with emotion. It seemed hardly possible that he was standing there beside her.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

by MRS. ELLSBURY
(Address all communications to Mrs. Ellsbury, care of News Review.)

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: From the way all the girls write to you a person would think that all girls between 18 and 22 want to get married, or are in love with someone who isn't in love with them. I wonder if you have space for a girl who isn't either one. I am 19 years old, and have picked out my life work and intend to make a success of it before I marry. I think they are too silly, the way they write to you, as if there was nothing in the world so important as knowing why their beau didn't speak to them. I think 27 is a good age for a girl to marry, don't you? OPHELIA.

OPHELIA: Yours is a praiseworthy ambition, my dear, and I wish you all kinds of success. Don't forget the lighter side of life, and remember that all work and no play, etc. Yes, 27 is a good age to marry.

Dear Mrs. Ellsbury: I am a girl of 17, and go to dances with my mother but I never have a good time. The boys don't seem to dance with me, but other girls who aren't any better looking or dressed than I am have a good time. I am a reasonably good dancer, but if I don't get to dance more I won't get any better. I don't want of newspapermen and civilian visitors and has turned down numerous invitations to be the guest at various functions ashore, but with the officers and enlisted men aboard the ship and ashore it has been a different matter.

to go with boys a lot but I want to have a good time at dances.

ANXIOUS SEVENTEEN. To become popular at dances requires not a little perseverance and patience, and has nothing to do with clothes or beauty. Make friends with some nice girl who is popular and sit with her at dances. You will naturally meet and dance with some of her friends then. Be sweet and natural, and interested in your partners, and after a time I am sure you will have all the dances you want.
