A SCIENTIFIC CUP OF COFFEE

If we told the truth we could all own up to numerous cups of palatable coffee that we have had in our own homes or at the homes of friends where we know that the best of coffee is used.

But at last the scientists have found the secret of making good coffee. In a report entitled "Scientific Coffee Research," recently issued by Samuel C. Prescott, Professor in the Department of Biology and Public Health in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, many facts of interest are revealed.

Professor Prescott maintains that the blend of coffee has very little bearing on the flavor produced—that coffee of low commercial grade, if freshly roasted and ground and properly prepared, is better than high-grade coffee when it is stale and badly prepared. He also points out that the steams employed are of the utmost importance. Metal containers should never be used, says the report, because the action of coffee infusions on metals is pronounced and the by-product of metallic taste may be produced. Excelsior coffee, with its metallic particles, is a fact, has no influence on the taste of coffee.

Hints From a Housewife's Kitchen Diary. Cooking—Art and Science. A WHOLE VEGETABLE DINNER ON A SINGLE PLATTER. Vegetable salads are a very appetizing and healthful dish and should be served a few times a week during the summer months while fresh vegetables are available.

BEETS—APPETIZING AND JUICY. Many inexperienced housewives serve tasteless, colorless beets, simply because they do not know how to prepare them. They either cut the leaves off too close to the root or test them too often with a fork while boiling. One method is as bad as the other and so is the result.

BAKED FISH WITH PARSLEY SAUCE. Fish makes a nice light supper very much appreciated in warm weather, and bluefish, weakfish and fresh mackerel offer a variety at this season. It is especially nice baked and an agreeable change in the usual routine of roast, broil, fry and boil. Another advantage is that it requires such a short time to cook and although many housewives realize this they are averse to baking fish because they have experienced some trouble in removing it from the baking pan to a platter. This difficulty can be overcome by using an enameled ware baking pan. No transferring will be necessary then—the fish can be garnished with lemon and watercress and served intact in the china-like pan in which it is baked.
