A Point in Etiquette

When to Arrive.
If you have been invited to a friend's house for dinner or luncheon you should ordinarily not think of arriving more than five or ten minutes before the time set for the dinner. However, if you are coming from out of town, and find it convenient to arrive earlier, then you should let your hostess know of your plans beforehand.

It is regarded as a grave social error to be late to a dinner, luncheon or card party. If you find that you have been delayed even ten or fifteen minutes, you should immediately telephone or otherwise inform your hostess. If you find that you must be as much as a half-hour late—through conditions of course, which you cannot remedy—then suggest to your hostess that you had better not come at all. However, if she assures you that you will be welcome at a late hour, then you should be sure to go.

Never arrive at an "at-home" or reception even a moment before the time set. It is better not to arrive until at least a quarter of an hour after the time specified. That is, if the cards read "four to six," you are wise not to arrive at four, but wait until a quarter after four. Usually one should not stay more than a half hour at a reception unless you are an intimate friend and have been asked to stay through-out the reception. Do not arrive after a quarter of an hour before the last hour mentioned on the cards. That is, do not arrive after a quarter of six, and do not remain much after six.

ANTHONY THEATRE

Thousands of women unconsciously love cowards, according to Jacqueline Logan, popular Paramount player.

"These," she adds, "are largely moral cowards—the kind of men who could right many wrongs but who restrain because they fear what the world will think of them. Shifting blame to someone else and assuming innocence is so much easier."

It is the second type of coward—the physical—which is portrayed in "Code of the Sea," a Victor Fleming Paramount production, in which Miss Logan is featured with Rod La Rocque. "Code of the Sea," will be at the

Bobbed Hair Is Disguised for Evening Wear

Barbara La Marr Wears a Bandeau or a Wig to Make Her Bobbed Coiffure More Formal

The styles of hairdress worn by motion picture stars carry so much influence throughout the country that hairdressers are constantly being asked to "dress my hair like Alma Rubens" or Barbara La Marr." It is therefore interesting to know what P. H. Westmore, the hairdresser for First National, thinks of coiffure styles, because what Mr. Westmore thinks, many of the stars will do, and whatever the stars do will be followed by thousands of women.

"I believe bobbed hair is here to stay," says Mr. Westmore. "The athletic type of girl demands it. The snapper could not do without it, and with her snapper and there are thousands of older women to whom bobbed hair is becoming because of the shape of their face. With the dinner gown or evening dress, bobbed hair is often out of place, but clever girls are finding that it is very simple for this to be remedied without letting their hair grow."

"One way to give bobbed hair the effect of long hair is to wear a head dress. This method is so popular that it has brought into

For Women Only

By HEDDA HOYT

Fashion Editor of the United Press
NEW YORK, N. Y., Aug. 22.—(United Press.)—The feminine fashion world may be divided into two eras as far as underwear is concerned—the white lingerie era and the colored silk era.

Not so long ago, women of refinement would include no undergarments in their wardrobe unless they were made of the finest white linen and embroidered in hand-work. They considered silk underwear too "Parisian" and colored underthings lacked the refinement required by the gentlewoman.

Today white undergarments are decidedly passe. The poorest of shopgirls adopt imitations of the filmy colored silks and wear colored voiles. We sleep in silk nightgowns which would have shocked our grandmothers. These are minus sleeves, and with decorative necklines. We defy the winter's snow by wearing gauze silk stockings and low satin pumps and seem to grow harder by doing so.

Whenever something new is brought out in the way of underwear, we take it with a grain of salt and wait until the faddists have adopted it before purchasing it for ourselves. But the films and more colorful it is, the surer it is to remain in style.

Black Undergarments
Just now the black underthings are being introduced and women have their fingers crossed, waiting to see how these will go with the fashionable world. There are black satin girdles lined in pink georgette, black under-vests, step-ins and brassiers. At first, we think, "How terrible to wear black next to the body." But a few years ago we thought it would be terrible to wear colors of any description.

Even white handkerchiefs have passed out of fashion, and today we carry little colored silk or linen squares which match our costumes. Of course, handkerchiefs are small items in the wardrobe but they show the way styles are changing. No well-dressed woman carries a white, lace-trimmed handkerchief these days. On the other hand, her handkerchief may be of brilliant red crepe de chine or purple chiffon.

Those who have felt the luxury of silk underthings will never be content to return to cheerful linens. The average woman would rather own one silk petticoat than three cotton ones. And in the long run, the silk garment is, perhaps the most durable. It is easily laundered, lends itself better to the present slender silhouette, and wears well. It can be recolored at every wash if one wishes. The satisfaction of knowing that one is silk from the "skin" out is well worth the additional cost.

Just now lace is being used more extravagantly than ever on undergarments. Slip-lace has yokes of lovely lace and are edged about the legs with corresponding lace. Modillion insets are again coming into style and contrasting colored ribbons adorn everything. Costume slips also follow the vogue for lace being scalloped and lace-edged about the hem and with lace yokes. Fine pleating is also being used, despite the fact that the first laundering plays havoc with the pleats.

Lingerie silks have a wide range from China silk, crepe de chine, triple silk-voile, satin, etc., to the sheers of georgette and chiffons. Recently introduced are step-ins which use two pieces of georgette or chiffon, one layer posed over the other. This does away with the transparency of the material and, at the same time, produces softer coloring. Ribbons which trim these models, are also two-trim.

Black trims everything these days, even to the shoulder-ropes on the colored underthings. (One no longer has pink or lavender silk straps showing beneath one's sheer frock, unless the frock is off in one of those pastel shades. With all dark gowns, the narrow black satin shoulder-strap is being used for evening occasions silver or gold straps are preferred.)

At the notion counters one can buy little tape shoulder-strap cuffs, which can be worn in one's frocks. These come in black and white and have snapers so that when they are attached to the shoulder straps of the frock, they hold the straps of the frock. Nothing more secure than half-collared is more untidy showing at the shoulder neckline. Dark frocks always have a tendency to fade in one's shoulder-strap and one must be extremely careful to keep these straps from view.

Pajama lounge robes are new and interesting. Many of these can be quite easily made by the home dressmaker as they are very simple and rely upon contrasting combinations for their charm. Black satin trousers combined with Jaquettes of colorful figured silk are very easily made and are as attractive as many of the more elaborate models.

LIBERTY THEATRE
Said to be a remarkable photograph in every respect, "Daughters of Pleasure," in which Marie Prevost and Monte Blue are starred, will open at the Liberty Theatre Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. The story deals with the experiences of an oil boom. Their actions to their new station in life and the unexpected and thrilling situations which result from it constitute one of the most dynamic photodramas ever brought to the screen.

The new picture is beautifully embellished and has been admirably directed by William Beaudine, who was so masterfully directed "Penrod and Sam." The supporting cast is of all-star caliber, including Clara Bow, Edith Chapman and Wilfred Lucas. "Daughters of Pleasure," is a B. F. Zeldman production, distributed through Principal Pictures Corporation.

LIBERTY THEATRE
Jack Hoxie, among present day Western stars, comes to the Liberty Theatre today and tomorrow in "The Marshall of Money," a rapid-fire drama modeled along the lines of his previous successes but with many new twists and turns both in plot and in action to distinguish it from its predecessors.

Mr. Fox and the gentlemen who arrived Wednesday were taken out to the big timber in cars driven by D. W. Finkler and Fred Fisher. The fact that two of three of these men are the same ones who inspected the timber here a few weeks ago, confirms to some extent the rumor that a deal for the timber is pending. It is understood that the cruise of the company on two or three sections is to be checked, and that the party will probably be in the timber for a week or ten days.

DAWES AND BRYAN RECALL OLD TIMES

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
LINCOLN, Neb., Aug. 29.—Reminiscences of former days in Lincoln were exchanged and the coincidence which had brought them together here today between Governor Charles W. Bryan and Charles Dawes, vice-presidential nominees of the two old parties.

The two candidates, one a resident of this city, and the other who has declared he still regards Lincoln more of a home than any other city, although he left here thirty years ago, spent 15 minutes together in the governor's office at the state capitol, and departed with a hearty handshake and broad smiles.

"We talked about Lincoln and the old days. We did not discuss the campaign," General Dawes said on leaving the capitol.

Announcement that he intended to call on his democratic opponent was made by Mr. Dawes last night after he concluded his address on the agricultural situation at the University of Nebraska Memorial Stadium. When word was conveyed to Governor Bryan by newspaper men that he was to have the privilege of meeting Mr. Dawes he said:

"That's fine. I shall be waiting for General Dawes at the state house."

An so at the hour set, 11:30 o'clock Mr. Dawes walked briskly into the capitol to find the Nebraska governor true to his word, waiting for him in his office.

P. C. Rarke, secretary to Mr. Bryan, met Mr. Dawes in the outer office with a pleasant greeting. "Good morning, General. Welcome to Lincoln."

Mr. Dawes shook hands and returned: "Hello, young fellow."

Governor Bryan took Mr. Dawes by the arm and escorted him to a chair beside his desk, but before they hardly were seated before the latter began puffing away contentedly at his peculiar pipe and listened intently for a few minutes while the governor went back to the early notices, when the republican nominee was a young lawyer of this city and when the democratic candidate came here as a salesman from his home in Salem, Illinois, to join his brother, William Jennings, or W. J. as Mr. Dawes, like most Lincoln people prefer to call him.

TWENTY-SEVEN HURT IN TRAIN SMASH-UP

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)
SYRACUSE, Aug. 30.—Probable cause of the rear end collision of two New York Central passenger trains at Savannah early today was said by railroad officials to have been disregard of automatic block signals by Walter Gibbons, engineer of the "Detrolter," which crashed into the stalled Lake Shore limited.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 30. The Detrolter 2 and the Lake Shore limited No. 47 crack New York Central trains crashed near Savannah, outside of Syracuse early today.

According to railroad officials the Detrolter, bound for Detroit, smashed into the rear car of the Lake Shore train, when a brakeman in the train line caused the brakes on number 16 to set. The rear car, a sleeper was wrecked, the occupants being hurled to the floor from their berths. The engine on the Detrolter, according to passengers, ploughed for fifteen feet into the rear coach of the Lake Shore train. The Detrolter's engine was derailed by the impact and the baggage car smashed. Traffic was tied up for several hours.

When news of the crash reached Rochester and Syracuse, special trains carrying physicians and nurses were rushed to the scene. The accident was in an isolated spot almost in the center of the Montezuma marshes.

The most seriously hurt were rushed to the former city and the rest brought here.
