Rules For Table Setting

In setting a dinner table the plate should be an inch from the edge of the table, directly in front of the person to be served. A "cover" is the space allowed for each person, which should be about 20 inches. The chair should touch the tablecloth, or come to the edge of the table. The knife is at the right with the edge toward the plate, the spoon at the left of the plate. All silverware should be one inch from the edge of the table.

If in doubt which piece of silver to use for a course, eat it—that is, use the fork or spoon laid farthest from the plate for the first course, and the others in succeeding order.

The glass should be at the tip of the knife, and only 3-4 fl. Bread and butter plates are not used at a formal dinner; at other times they are put either at the tip of the fork or above the napkin. The napkin should be placed with the fold toward the plate. When you unfold your napkin, do it under the edge of the table. Do not unfold it all the way if it is a large dinner napkin; half way is proper. It should be laid in the lap, not tucked into the clothing as one too often sees it in restaurants.

The cup and saucer comes to the right of the silver, with the handle to the right. Like the plate, it is an inch from the table edge. Never leave the spoon in the cup. Many a tea or coffee stain on fine linen has been the result of this social error. The spoon should lie in the saucer at the right.

If you use individual salt dips, they should be in front of the plate (at the top), or if there is one for each two guests, between the plates at the top. The nut dish is also before the plate. A place card with the guest's name on should be against the nut dish or on the napkin.

Before using the butter spreader, it may be placed across, above the top of the plate, but when used it goes on the bread and butter plate across the right side, with the blade in.

Parina Pudding—When there are only two to be served, it is sometimes hard to plan a simple dessert. Parina pudding may be made by slowly pouring a heaping tablespoonful of farina into a cup and a half of boiling milk that has first been stirred till it is whirling, then stirring all the time. Add a fourth of an even teaspoonful of salt, cook five minutes, then set in another saucepan containing boiling water, cover, and cook 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Flavor with lemon or vanilla, turn into cups, and serve cold with sweetened cream.

Pork Chops and Sauce Robert—If you like pork chops, this is a nice way to serve them. Trim neatly and have ready finely chopped onion and parsley, with which to sprinkle both sides of the chops, also salt and pepper. Beat them lightly with a broad knife or wooden paddle to make the parsley mixture and spice stick. Then dip each chop in slightly beaten egg, roll in fine bread crumbs, let stand 5 minutes, dip in melted butter and roll again in the crumbs. Arrange them in a wire broiler and broil 5 to 7 minutes over a clean fire.

Chop 2 large onions fine, put in a stewpan with a tablespoonful of butter, and cook very slowly until it is well colored. Add a teaspoonful of flour, stir and brown again, then add slowly a cup and a half of beef stock and 2 tablespoonfuls of vinegar. When the sauce is smooth and thick simmer it down to a cup full and add a scant teaspoonful of mustard, salt and pepper.

Four this around the chops when they are broiled, after they are on the platter.

A Luncheon Menu

If you do not know what to have for luncheon, why not try a menu like this: First: Scotch broth in cups; then baked beans in little individual pots, cold meat with pickles, brown bread sandwiches, a potato salad. For dessert, vanilla ice cream with either coffee cakes or crisp cookies. Serve coffee with crackers and cheese at the end.

Someone's Kitchen Fires

Someone has said the kitchen is like the power-house of an electric railway. The comfortable cars fly fast over smooth rails, but the passenger sitting on his comfortable seat rarely gives a thought to the power-house. The motor man keeps his eye on the track ahead, his hand on the power lever, but even he rarely thinks of the power-house. The kitchen fire is really the motive power of a large part of the household machinery. Where there is an electric range, with buttons to turn plainly marked for the varying heats, or even a clock automatic control, there is no excuse for the cook's failures; but where wood and coal must be relied on, or even gas, that must be watched and turned up and down, it takes patience, skill and experience to get uniform results that bring a reputation for being a "good cook."

Liberty Theatre

Tense drama, good-natured comedy and heart-thrilling romance are combined in equal proportions in "Chalk Marks," a Frank Woods Production to which local theatre-goers will be treated tomorrow at the Liberty theatre. The story, an original one by Woods, is presented by an all-star cast that is composed of such favorites as Margaret Snow, June Elvidge, Ramsay Wallace, Helen Ferguson, Priscilla Bonner, Lydia Kert and Rex Lease.

Majestic Theatre

"Merry-Go-Round," at the Majestic theatre tonight, was nine months in the making and more than 1,000 actors and actresses took part. The cost of building the elaborate sets to duplicate the Prater, which is the Coney Island of Vienna, the emperor's castle and other historic spots was enormous, but this expenditure was more than justified by the final excellence. Travelers who have visited Vienna admit that Universal has achieved something very much worth while in duplicating the locales so faithfully.

Antlers Theatre

Hoot Gibson, star of "Broadway or Bust," Universal-Gibson production at the Antlers theatre tonight, has a somewhat different type of play for his next performance before the camera.

waistlines grow higher. Recently one sees many frocks on Fifth Avenue with the belt placed at the normal waistline and skirts all appear both scant and short.

Where inverted pleats and circular panels are set into the skirts they are skillfully maneuvered so that scantiness is achieved in spite of the actual fullness of the hemline.

Cloth coats of conspicuously new fall variety are being worn by most of the smartly dressed women of New York. One sees few suits as dithers are of the 'ensemble' variety—dresses types with the three-quarter length coat matching the one-piece frock beneath it, and the whole lavishly fur-trimmed. Black coats of slender lines with fur collars and borders are those most evident. Hats remain small and rather tailored and one sees more velvets than felts. Black velvet seems to have the preference in spite of the fact that windows are displaying eras large black velvet hats and even these are either large variations of the cloche or their brims are turned abruptly upwards in back with the mushroom effect in front. Even the larger shapes are but slightly trimmed and many of the more entirely untrimmed.

There is a complete absence of pink toned hosiery. No well dressed women are wearing them on the street and even for evening wear they are being replaced by silver tones. Brown shoes are much in evidence and hosiery of matching or somewhat lighter shade is worn with them.

Young Misses are appearing in sport clothes which prove that plaids are an important factor this season. Huge plaids are being worn in tops and dresses and even in scarves. Even the felt hat follows the vogue with plaid ribbon trimming.

FASHION COMPELS SLENDER "UNDIES"

(Fashion Editor of United Press)

NEW YORK, Oct. 18.—

Mary is a slender Miss. Defies all Madam Grundles. Her figure's almost like an elf's. Cause she wears slender undies!

To attain a slender appearance these days one must wear "slender" undergarments. Ten years ago almost all women looked plump—because of the heavy undergarments which added inches and inches to their circumference.

The directorate version of the chemise which has recently arrived from Paris will undoubtedly be taken up by Americans who like the idea of lingerie conforming to the lines of the figure. Women are tiring of the unsightly steps which have no waistline and also tiring of the separate garments, drawers and brassiere.

Hence the advisability of the one-piece garment which adheres to the figure and conforms with the lines of the present-day gown. Directoire undies are very simple affairs with the bodice and drawers connected by a narrow belt at the normal waistline and the garment buttoning down the back, or the side-front. The bodice is more or less tight-fitting and has straps over the shoulders. The narrow belt is made to fit easily about the waist line and the fullness of the drawers is concentrated at the sides, thus leaving a flat front and back effect. The drawers are left open at the sides and are usually outlined with a border of silk of contrasting color and the same border effect extends about the top of the bodice. Many models use inverted darts over the hips which add even more slenderness. Almost the lines of the frocks (SETTLE) all underwear is being built along the lines of the frocks of today. Some women go as far as to wear only the thinnest and most clinging Jersey silks under their evening frocks.

WALT JOHNSON MAY MANAGE COAST TEAM

(Associated Press Leased Wire.)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—It seems to be up to Walter Johnson to decide finally whether he will continue to shine in the armament of the world champion nationals.

Clark Griffith, president of the club says if the veteran hurler should be offered an opportunity to better himself "it would be mighty hard for me to stand in his way," although "I would certainly feel that I was being a hero, in surrendering any claim on his services."

Although the flash of his pitching arm has not been dimmed by 18 years of major league baseball, Johnson hankers after an interest in some western minor league club, so he can settle down. Griffith, of course has been trying to dissuade him from leaving the team he helped bring to glory, but he admits he has not been able to talk Walter out of his idea of leaving us.

Flooded With Campaign Matter—

Seven sacks of campaign literature were received at the Roseburg postoffice last night for distribution in this city and vicinity. There were also great quantities of other mail received which to a degree has congested the local force of employees who have for quite a period, been handling unusual quantities of mail for this vicinity. Train number 13 was one hour late this morning, which also added to the difficulty of handling the big mail received.

Want More Prompt Delivery—

A number of local citizens this morning urged for a more prompt delivery of mail throughout the city, and called on Postmaster Heintze for the purpose of ascertaining what could be done to bring about relief. Mr. Heintze had previously taken up the matter with the postoffice department and urged that additional help be supplied to the Roseburg office, as the local force is entirely inadequate to handle promptly the great amount of mail received by the Roseburg postoffice. Especially in this case when the incoming mail is at its highest peak, which is of frequent occurrence. Several business men have taken the responsibility of getting up a petition which will be presented to the postmaster to assist him in presenting these facts a second time to the department at Washington, D. C.
