FLORENCE KLING HARBING DIES

of continual accomplishments. From the day she first traced the world in a pioneer home in the middle west until, broken in health, she undertook the heavy responsibilities of the White House, she encountered hardships before which a less courageous spirit would have weakened into gray mediocrity.

The most severe test of her fortitude was during the illness and death of Mr. Harding and the trying ordeal that followed—the cross-country trip with the body to the public services in Washington; then the trip to and from the funeral at Marion, Ohio. Mrs. Harbing had barely recovered from an illness during which her life hung in the balance when it came time for the president to start upon what proved his final trip, that to Alaska. Because of her devotion to her distinguished husband and unwilling of her own physical condition she accompanied him on that journey and was constantly by his side. During the president's illness at San Francisco she never left him for a minute and it was she who summoned the physicians when the change came that finally resulted in death.

Despite these trials she not only kept her courage and her vigorous individuality, but she remained as well a depth of human understanding and a confidence in herself and those about her that endeared her to many thousands. After she became First Lady of the Land, as always in the years preceding, she kept her own individuality, attention, wounded veterans of the world war owed her many a debt for hours gladdened by her visits to their hospitals or by flowers sent by her personal order from the White House conservatories. Her unusual outpouring of sympathy extended to animals, many of whom she befriended and protected.

In her thoughtfulness for the interests of others and in her loyalty to her friends, she was outspoken to a degree that won for her recognition as one of the most vigorous-minded women who ever presided over the household of a president. On the night of election day in 1920 she announced her determination to send away the policeman stationed at the White House gates since the United States entered the war—a purpose which was fulfilled on the very day Mr. Harbing took office.

She was always well groomed, but never cared for extremes in dress. Her costume particularly was said to be the mystery and envy of many Washington society leaders. She had an interesting collection of lace and some rare and handsome pieces usually helped to complete her gown. She did not affect jewelry and usually wore only a diamond solitaire or diamond clasp on a piece of black velvet about the throat.

In her younger days she had been an expert horsewoman and an accomplished pianist. Many musicians will always remember the interest she took in them. While in Marion she taught music, and many of the boys and girls of her home town were her pupils. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but was very tolerant of others, and as the president was a Baptist, it was the custom of the Harbing's to attend the various churches in Washington.

It was from her training as a horsewoman that she acquired the love for animals which became more and more marked in later years. In the White House "Laddie Boy", the president's Alfydale, was her constant companion. More than once she stopped on the street to reprimand drivers who were punishing their horses. At least once here, Old Clover, who lived in Pennsylvania, would have been willing to stand in her companion. Heated that Clover, who was 54 years old, was about to be killed because his master was unable to provide for him in his days of useless old age, she sent the owner a $100 check to assist in keeping him in comfort to the end of his days.

Mrs. Harbing was active in philanthropic circles. She devoted much of her time to girls work and was the national head of the Girl Scouts organization. President Harding was the second husband of Mrs. Harbing. Her first was Henry De Wolfe, whose parents were neighbors of the Kling family. This marriage, contracted early in life, proved to be unhappy and the future mistress of the White House obtained a divorce in 1883 on the grounds of gross neglect. One son, Marshall, the girl De Wolfe, lived to marry, his death occurred at Keesee, Colorado, in 1911.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The death of Mrs. Harbing, widow of a deep actor, of personal wealth in the national capital, was the latest of a series of deaths in the government headed by President Coolidge joined in expressions of grief and regret, but quite as other tributes of affection poured in among those she had surrounded in the humbler walks of life and those who had been with education and with grace in the tragic course of her long tenure as mistress of the White House.

Mrs. Harbing had many warm friends in Washington. Long before her husband became president, in the wife of a wealthy lawyer, she won a reputation as a capable business and social leader in many public relations. These qualities she carried with her into the White House. Among those who mourn her death deeply at her death are the wounded soldiers at Walter Reed

Fame and Glory

came to me, through these beauty aids
By Edna Wallace Hopper

I made myself a famous beauty and the race. I have lived for 40 years a glorious career.

Now I remain at my height—as young and beautiful as ever. The city of thousands who see me daily on the stage.

All that because I searched the world for aids to youth and beauty. I found the best that science offered. Then all the later, better helps.

Now these superior helps are at every woman's call. All druggists and toilet counters have them. In four preparations are combined 32 matchless ingredients.

My Youth Cream.
My Youth Cream is a remarkable creation, combining many factors. It contains preservative both lemon and strawberry. Also all the best helps science gave me to foster and protect the skin.

It comes in two types—cold cream and vanishing. I use it as a night cream, also daytimes as a powder base. Never is my skin without it. My velvet complexion shows what that cream can do. The cost is 60c per jar.

My Facial Youth is a liquid cleanser which I also use to France. Great beauty experts the world over now advise this formula, but their price is too high for most women.

It contains no animal, no vegetable fat. The skin cannot absorb it. So it cleans to the depth, then departs. All the dirt, grease,

(Associated Press Licensed Wire.)
MARION, Ohio, Nov. 21.—military guard of honor at the tomb of President Harding in Marion cemetery, will perform a double duty beginning next Monday when the body of the president's widow, who died here this morning, is placed in the tomb beside that of her husband. It probably will be the first time that a military guard has been on duty at the tomb of a former president of the United States and his wife.

Four weeks ago today Mrs. Harbing visited Lieutenant Walter Lee Sherfy, in command of the detachment of 28 men of the Tenth United States Infantry, Fort Thomas, Kentucky, and met each member of the detachment personally and thanked them for the personal interest they have taken in guarding her husband's tomb.

Today Lieutenant Sherfy, in a statement said that members of his command felt they have lost one of their best friends. He recalled the keen interest Mrs. Harbing has taken in them, bringing them many gifts and good things to eat.
