KID KAPLAN WINS TECHNICAL VICTORY OVER DANNY KRAMER

(Associated Press Local Wire.)
NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The world's featherweight boxing crown rests on the head of Louis "Kid" Kaplan, Meriden, Conn., "buzz" today as a result of his decisive victory over Danny Kramer, Philadelphia scoutpaw, in a title match here last night. Kramer was battered into submission by the whirling Kaplan.
 The end, in the form of a fluttering towel, from Kramer's corner, came after one minute and eleven seconds of fighting in the ninth round, giving the Meriden flash a technical knockout.
 The battle was one of the most spectacular title matches ever seen. Both had everything to gain and nothing to lose and with this in mind, defensive tactics were forgotten.
 His face streaked with blood from a broken nose and two badly battered eyes, his lips cut and his body pinkened by the storm of punishment only by sheer nerve.
 Kaplan fought an aggressive, merciless fight, wearing down his opponent by the power of his drive and then cutting him to shreds as the gloves became wet. He sailed in at the opening gong and never let up.

SCIENTISTS MEET FOR LAST SESSION

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Meeting for their concluding session today, delegates attending the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science were assessing the program reported in the various fields of science as making the gathering as one of the most significant in the organization's history.
 Outstanding among the lines of progress reported are those dealing with the knowledge of the planets; and the effect of some forms of electricity and of light upon the determination of the sex and character of offspring. Observations that chimpanzees can really think attracted much attention.
 The association has gone on record at the meeting as approval of the proposed reform of the calendar to a year of 13 months or equal length; the projected national arboretum and the botanical garden; and the study of oceanic conditions, undertaken under the direction of the navy department.
 Other actions of the meeting have included advocacy of a new national park at Glacier Bay, Alaska, and the condemnation of government reclamation of swamp lands not suitable for farm land, but used by wild fowl.

WHO'S WHO AND WHAT'S HAPPENED
CYNTHIA and JIM LELAND, bride and groom, settle in their new home to find that Jim's mother expects to rule their lives. Cynthia rebels; Jim's devotion to his mother blinds him.
TODAY'S INSTALMENT
IV—BRIDGE TABLE BATTLES
CYNTHIA did not mind playing bridge sometimes, but she hated spending a delightful afternoon playing it with women who treated the game as a matter of life and death. And being late to her sister-in-law's party, given in her honor, did not make the occasion any more pleasant.
 Her mother-in-law clutched her as she entered the door, said "How could you forget, Cynthia dear?" in reproachful tones, hastily introduced her to the guests whom she did not know, and pushed her into her place at one of the tables. The game began.
 Cynthia's partner was a large, expensive dressed person who indulged in bitter frankness as the game progressed.
 "Partner, why didn't you obey my signal?" "Partner, didn't you understand that I meant you to lead clubs then?" "Partner, you could have raised my bid and been sure of making it!"
 Cynthia began to feel that she was expected to be a mind reader. This room was close and heavy with the scent of roses. Her head ached. Her hat felt too tight. The large, vehement woman got more and more bitter. The others at the table began to be simply sympathetic. Cynthia wished that she could have worse luck—invariably she held good cards, played them her best, and then was shown in detail how she could have played them much better. Nothing but a grand slam seemed to satisfy the large woman.
 "Young Mrs. Leland plays such a peculiar game!" The large woman, dumfry for that hand, was talking with some friends nearby; even her lowest tones were easily audible. Cynthia set her jaw, took off her hat, and shuffled the cards, determined to show this enemy of the moment that she could play bridge well when she had to, even though she loathed it. She concentrated on the game, playing more carefully than ever before, and tried not to consider the possibility that, if she played badly enough, nobody would ever dare ask her to a bridge party again!
 The large woman, playing against her now, opened her bulging eyes wide. Leland's peculiar game evidently had its good points, after all.
 "I don't understand your bidding—I don't understand—" she murmured feebly, when Cynthia had scored high against her. "Your game is most erratic."
 "Yes," retorted Cynthia sweetly, jotting down her score after a hand in which she had taken tricks that seemed lost to her forever. An impudent comment came to her lips, but she checked it. After all, these people were the ones among whom she most spent her life, since she had married Jim. The fact that she would never have chosen them for her friends meant nothing. She must live as her mother-in-law and her sister-in-law wished, apparently—for the present, at least.
 "But not any longer than I can help," she vowed, when the game was over at last, and perfectly dressed nobs were serving perfectly prepared refreshments. She'd have to do that sort of thing, too, in her house. "You were entertained, and then you entertained, and this was your entertainment—a vicious circle! She began to estimate the amount of mousie she had eaten since she and Jim returned from their honeymoon and the round of post-nuptial parties began. She was sure that it ran into gallons!

 Women were talking to her, making the usual comments, asking the usual questions. How did she like her new home? Didn't she find the city charming? She had gone to Miss Lewis' school in Washington, hadn't she? Perhaps she had known Elaine Graham there? No?
 "Not that anybody cares whether I knew her or not," she told herself as the chatter ceased. "But they have to say something." Would they ever really know these women, and like them? How stupid and uninteresting she must seem to them, how like a drowsed-up doll!
 She went home as soon as she possibly could, to find Jim waiting for her. He was tired and rather cross—had looked forward to coming home and finding her there, he announced, and going for a drive out into the country.
 "But, Jim dear, it was your sister's bridge party; I had to go," she told him.
 "Yes, of course," he answered.

through their hands between the two countries of $62,416,147. They then added 19 per cent to cover transactions presumably concluded in Moscow, Berlin, London and other European metropolitan centers, making an estimated total of $74,257,761. This exceeded by $22,277,661 the pre-war turnover in Russian-American trade of about $46,000,000. The present turnover of $69,757,761, represented actual exports from the United States to Russia of $37,612,414 and imports of $32,145,347, leaving an apparent trade balance in favor of this country of about $41,562,961, according to the books.

DIFFERENCE WITH KING DENIED BY EGYPTIAN PARTY

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 3.—Disavowal of any differences between the "Wafd" executive branch of the Egyptian nationalist party and King Fuad, is voiced in a manifesto issued by Zagloul Pasha, nationalist leader and head of the government which resigned following the assassination of the sirdar, Sir Lee Stack.
 "The enemies of the Wafd," the manifesto says, "have adopted the habit of inventing lies in order to influence the elections. The Wafd would not be concerned about them if they did not affect the highest personage in the country."
 "The Wafd continues to abide by its pledges. It has never had nor has it now, any thought against the king."
